EUROPEAN TROUBLES.

The Paris Treaty Explained by the Protocol of April.

No Breach of the Convention Without an Overt Act.

Prussia Insists on the Free Action of the Czar.

Turkey Determined to Resist Russian Pretensions.

A MORE PACIFIC FEELING.

Latest Aspect of the Hostilities in France.

The Positions of the Opposing Forces on the Loire.

Bismarck Exasperated by Mr. Gladstone's Anonymous Criticisms.

THE EASTERN DIFFICULTY.

A Loophole for Great Britain—No Breach of the Treaty Without an Overt Act—Another Aspect of the Prussian Attitude—The Sultan Determined to Resist Russian Pretensions—A Pacific Aspect.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—Article 9 of the treaty of March 30, 1856, is still regarded as a barrier to war, especially when considered in connection with the protocol of April 23 of the same year. This article, as explained by the protocol, requires reference of questions which may arise to a friendly Power, preliminary to any act of hostility. It will be noticed that an overt act—not a declaration, however hostile it may be in tone—is necessary to constitute a breach of the treaty. The overt act is still wanting.

PRUSSIA AND THE CZAR.

Prussia, in case of a revision of the treaty of Paris, will consent to no restriction on the free action of the Czar.

TURKEY RESOLUTE.

Advices from Constantinople show that the Porte is preparing to make a most energetic resistance to Russian pretensions.

A MORE PACIFIC ASPECT.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 20.—It is thought here that the aspect of the Russian difficulty is more pacific.

A RUSSIAN IRON-CLAD FLEET.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 20.—A St. Petersburg correspondent of the Indépendance Belge announces that a Russian iron-clad fleet, bought in the United States, is expected in the Dardanelles.

Russia's Reply to Earl Granville's Note—A Conciliatory Tone but no Change in the Position.

[The following appeared in our Sunday edition:]

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 18—8 P. M.—The reply of the Russian Government to Earl GRANVILLE's letter was promptly forwarded to London. Russia adopts a highly conciliatory tone, but remains entirely firm in the position already adopted, and refutes at length the statement that the movements of the Principalities, in contravention of the Treaty of Paris, enured to her advantage. She appeals to all the friendly Powers to note the fact that a Congress is impracticable in the present state of the principal European Powers, and that Russia expressly disclaims any hostile intentions or desire to disregard any of the provisions of the Treaty of Paris other than those which are generally admitted to be unjust and oppressive against her. She would deeply regret the interruption of the friendly relations which she has endeavored to cultivate with Great Britain, but she repeats her intention to act upon the previous notification in regard to the Black Sea.

The general feeling of the people of St. Petersburg is favorable to the position of the Government. GORTSCHAKOFF had a long interview yesterday with the Italian Minister and a special Envoy from Florence.

Victoria Disapproves of Lord Granville's Note—The Feeling in England More Peaceful—John Stuart Mill for Peace—America's Position Defined in Vienna.

[The following appeared in our Sunday edition:]

LONDON, Nov. 19.—The Prince of WALES, representing the views of the Queen, is understood to have expressed to the Cabinet her disapproval of Earl GRANVILLE's hasty reply to Russia.....JOHN STUART MILL writes a communication to the Times, this morning, protesting against England's embarking on a war with Russia on any existing provocation, especially as the demands made by Prussia thus far seem worthy of consideration. Mr. FROUDE also writes to the Times urging the Government to change front, rather than extend the war. The Morning Post, per contra, says Russia must recant or embark in a war insuring her humiliation. The feeling in England, today, is somewhat more peaceful, but there is still a strong under-current of excitement. Securities at the Stock Exchange are lower, and breadstuffs are higher.

AN EXPLANATION.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 19.—The Golos, of this city, denies that Russia offered neutrality to Prussia on condition that the Paris treaty of 1856 be set aside. Russia only desired a modification of the treaty. While Russia is quite willing to submit her pretensions to the decision of a conference, Prussia will only consent to the scheme on condition that her relations with France shall not be discussed thereat.

TURKEY'S REPLY.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 17.—The infringements of the Paris treaty of 1856, dwelt on by GORTSCHAKOFF are as follows: The union of the Danubian Principalities; the election of CHARLES as Hospodar, and the passage of Turkish frigates through the Bosphorus. The Vizier replied, saying that an immediate answer was impossible, and that the subject must be submitted to the Great Powers of Europe.

MALTA AND GIBRALTAR.

LONDON, Nov. 19—Afternoon.—The Spectator today says the armament at Malta and Gibraltar has been ordered to be hastened. The port and channel fleet is to go to the Levant at once.

AMERICA'S POLICY.

Dispatches from Vienna state that the American policy is suspected to be in favor of Russia on the Eastern question, and that Austria has sent a firm reply to St. Petersburg, and also to Berlin.

Italy for Russia—Anti-Russian Feeling in Vienna.

[The following appeared in our Sunday edition:]

LONDON, Nov. 19—P. M.—Dispatches received here from Florence state that the Italian Government has certainly declined to join in the diplomatic move against Russia. RUSSELL's pamphlet, just issued, has been suppressed at the suggestion of his friends.

FLORENCE, Nov. 19.—The collective note of the great Powers to Russia is still under consideration by the Italian Government.

ANTI-RUSSIAN FEELING IN VIENNA.

VIENNA, Nov. 19.—In the Reichsrath today the Ministry carried an address to the Throne by a large majority. The journals of this city are all vigorously Anti-Russian. The Austrian reply to the Russian note is expected to reach St. Petersburg today. The Abend Post of this city denies that Austria has made any propositions for war.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—A special messenger has been dispatched to Vienna relative to the Eastern question. There is a better feeling in Russia in consequence of GORTSCHAKOFF's dispatch, which is considered as assuring the desired object without war.

THE WAR.

OPERATIONS ON THE LOIRE.

The Germans Falling Back Northward—French Losses at Chateaudun—The Advance of Prince Charles.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—A dispatch from Tours reports that the Grand Duke of MECKLENBURG and Gen. VON DER TANN are falling back, while the French are advancing and threatening to outflank them both. It is thought that Gen. MANTEUFFEL will march to the Loire.

THE AFFAIR AT CHATEAUDUN.

The French loss at Chateaudun is now reported at 200 killed, wounded and prisoners.

TOURS, Nov. 20—Afternoon, via London.—Prussian scouts were seen in the vicinity of Montargis on the 17th. [Montargis is within about thirty-five miles of Orleans, with which it connects by railway.]

ANOTHER STATEMENT.

VERSAILLES, Nov. 18.—The Army of the Loire has withdrawn south to avoid being shut up between the German Armies marching against it. The American General HALLECK has left for Germany.

NORTHERN OPERATIONS.

French Reverses near Le Mans—A Success at Sarcy—The Siege of Montmedy.

LILLE, Nov. 20.—There was a fight yesterday in the Department of the Aisne between a French force, composed of France-Tireurs and Mobile Guards and a Prussian detachment moving from Targny. The French finally retired in good order. The losses on both sides were about equal. There was a similar encounter on the same day, near Monceau, in which the French were driven back. A skirmish at Guisy, near Le Fère, is also reported. At Sarcy, on the 16th, an engagement took place in which the Prussians lost 200 killed, wounded and taken prisoners, and fifteen France-Tireurs were wounded and one killed.

NEUFCHATEL THREATENED.

The Germans threaten an attack on Neufchâtel.

MONTMEDY.

On Wednesday last, a sortie was made from Montmédy by two companies of the Garde Mobile. Every one of them was either killed or taken prisoner. The French losses in the conflicts were serious. The Prussians now confine the bombardment to the fortress of Montmédy.

SNOW.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—The ground in the Departments of Orne, Eure and Sarthe is covered with deep snow.

PARIS.

The French Flank Movement—Prussians Repulsed at Evreux.

ROUEN, Nov. 19, via LONDON, Nov. 20.—The Germans attacked Evreux today, but they met with a vigorous resistance from the National Guards and retired to the environs.

VERSAILLES, Nov. 18.—No sortie from Paris is expected at present.

The Grand Movement from Paris—A Concentrated Attack on the Prussians to be Made.

[The following appeared in our Sunday edition:]

LONDON, Nov. 19.—Rumors continue to circulate of a proposed concentrated attack on the Prussian positions before Paris by the French, attended by a sortie from the city. The time fixed for this grand move is said to be next Monday or Tuesday. A Paris balloon letter says Gen. TROCHU intends shortly to force from the city 10,000 half-starved citizens for whom he cannot longer provide food.

THE EAST.

Prussians Surprised at Chastillon—All Either Killed or Taken Prisoners.

[The following appeared in our Sunday edition:]

TOURS, Nov. 19—Midnight.—The following official dispatch has been made public: "The Prussians at Chastillon were surprised by a party of Garibaldians under RICCIOTTI, and all were either killed or taken prisoners."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. Gladstone's Strictures on Bismarck's Policy—The Prussian Chancellor Enraged—An Inquiry into Bismark's Conduct—The Republic and the Elections—Captains of Prizes.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—There is much remark in diplomatic circles on the imprudence of Mr. GLADSTONE in writing to the London Times on the situation over the signature of "Scrutator." A communication in reply appears from MAX MULLER. It is understood that BISMARCK is extremely vindictive toward GLADSTONE in consequence of the comments on Prussian policy he has made or inspired in the public prints.

BAZAINE.

A commission of inquiry is to be called to try Marshal BAZAINE.

THE PROPOSED ELECTION.

The Tours Moniteur declares that the deliverance of the country from invasion must precede any election for a General Assembly, but the Anti-Republican Press of France denounce this course.

THE CAPTURED CAPTAINS.

The Moniteur says the Captains of German merchantmen captured by the French naval forces, will be treated as prisoners of war.

GERMAN ANNEXATION.

BERLIN, Nov. 20.—The treaty admitting the States of Baden and Hesse into the North German Confederation has been signed. The details will be adjusted by conference within a fortnight.

HARTFORD, Conn., Nov. 20.—A man, supposed to be J. MOWRY, of Unionville, fell overboard from the steamer State of New-York, lying at her dock here, at 10½ this evening, and was drowned. His body was recovered in a few minutes. An inquest will be held Monday in the forenoon.

WASHINGTON.

Return of Vice-President Colfax and Family—No Foreign Complications—New-York Visitors at the White House—Gen. Chipman Not Seeking Official Honors—The Missouri Bolters and the Administration—A Charitable Scheme on Foot.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20.—Vice-President COLFAX and family arrived here last evening, and have reopened their residence on Lafayette-square. The family are all in excellent health. Mr. and Mrs. COLFAX visit New-York on Tuesday, and will remain absent at the North a week or ten days. Gen. PAINE, of Wisconsin, is also in the city, and will remain until the meeting of Congress.

NO FOREIGN COMPLICATIONS.

The President remarked, yesterday, that Secretary FISH had sent no dispatch to our legation at London on the Alabama claims, and that there was, of course, no foundation for the assertion or the suspicion that there was any understanding between the country and Russia. This Government will adhere to the position that, as it cannot permit any interference by foreign nations on this continent, so it cannot itself interfere in the affairs of the European continent.

COLLECTOR MURPHY AT THE WHITE HOUSE.

Collector MURPHY and Hon. WILLIAM ORTON arrived here this morning. They spent the afternoon at the Executive Mansion, and dined with the President this evening. In order to set all minds at ease, it may as well be said that this visit has no signification whatever of a political character. These gentlemen indulged in a very agreeable interchange of views with the President, and Mr. ORTON returned to New-York tonight. Collector MURPHY will remain a day or two longer, in order to transact some business with the Treasury. All idea of a change in the New-York Collectorship may be dismissed, as no such thing is contemplated.

THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The Southern Pacific Railroad project will be pressed with vigor at the approaching session. Gen. FREMONT and MARSHALL O. ROBERTS, Esq., the leading managers of the Company, have taken elegant suites of rooms at the Arlington, and the business will be closely attended to.

A MAN WHO PREFERS PRIVATE TO OFFICIAL LIFE.

The report has been extensively circulated that Gen. N. P. CHIPMAN, of this city, would be a candidate for the clerkship of the House of Representatives of the Forty-second Congress. Gen. CHIPMAN writes to the Chronicle a denial, and says he is quite content with the pursuits of a private life, and will not be drawn from them by any inducements which political office may offer.

THE MISSOURI BOLTERS.

The prospective contest between the Schurz-Brown party in Missouri and the Administration, as a result to follow the success of their ticket, is not in a promising shape. Senator SCHURZ, who has been here some days, has been exceedingly careful not to say anything indicating any intention on his part to carry the division into the Senate. He has, probably, changed his purpose somewhat, for during the canvass in Missouri he expressed an intention of pushing the fight against the President in the Senate. But the fact is, that Senator SCHURZ and his party are sagacious enough to see that there can be practically no issue between them and the Administration, unless they make a complete surrender to the Democracy. The President would never have taken issue with them if they had carried their efforts for enfranchisement in Missouri inside the party. The President is himself committed to such a policy; and his difference with the Missouri bolters was that they sought to disrupt the party in order to carry their policy, instead of seeking to control the policy of the party by remaining with it. Now that they have carried their point, they find that so far as their political strength is concerned, they have thrown away the meat and kept the bone. The Administration cheerfully acquiesces in enfranchisement in Missouri, though it may not applaud the means whereby it was secured; they have no strength of themselves, and nothing to stand on outside the Republican Party, and they must naturally gravitate back to a position of fealty, in order to sustain themselves and be supported in holding on to what little the recent campaign in Missouri has left them in possession of.

THE POOR OF WASHINGTON.

The Society for the Relief of the Poor of Washington, which has lately been organized by some of the influential and charitable ladies of this city, gives promise of being what the national Capital should have—a permanent self-sustaining model charity. It will be incorporated this Winter, and will be under the direction of the lady managers, and in its good works will not exhibit either political, sectional, or sectarian bias. The preparations for the grand Fair to be held for the benefit of this Society the first of next month, are nearly completed, and the money and costly donations of various kinds already received from the charitable business men of New-York, through Mrs. DURBAN, who is still in that City, and the charitable of other cities, will make an attractive display, and realize for the ladies all that they need in addition to their own good acts to found their charity.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

THE BRITISH MISSION.

The names of seven gentlemen, with statements of their merits and qualifications for Minister to England, have been presented to President GRANT by their respective friends, but he has not made up his mind on the subject.

SENATOR CATTELL.

Senator CATTELL, of New-Jersey, arrived here yesterday for the purpose of attending to some public business. He, in company with Ex-Gov. MARCUS L. WARD and Judge BRADLEY, is the guest of Secretary ROBESON. He is in fine health and spirits.

VISCOUNT TREILHARD AND THE FRENCH MISSION.

The following are the facts concerning Viscount TREILHARD's movements: When he arrived at New-York eight days ago from Chili he announced the fact by telegraph to Minister BERTHEMY, who, by his request, immediately repaired to the Department of State to ascertain whether he would be received as M. BERTHEMY's successor, having in his possession the credentials received from the Emperor's Government. The Secretary informed M. BERTHEMY that Viscount TREILHARD could not be received, as a new de facto Government had now control of French affairs, and therefore it would be necessary to procure from it the proper authorization. The question was asked whether a telegram from the Government at Paris would be sufficient, to which the Secretary replied in the negative, saying that this would be a departure from usage, or from the course always pursued in such cases. Several days afterward Viscount TREILHARD came to Washington and called, in company with M. BERTHEMY, on Secretary FISH, who unofficially invited him to his house, and there took occasion, in the course of conversation, to explain to him, as he had previously explained to M. BERTHEMY, the reasons why he could not be received as M. BERTHEMY's successor. The new Minister expressed himself satisfied with the explanation, and informed the Secretary that he had taken measures to produce the required formal credentials from the Paris Government, which will be forwarded by JULES FAVRE. The Secretary was subsequently advised that the credentials are now on their way to Viscount TREILHARD. Therefore, when they shall have arrived, Viscount TREILHARD will be received as M. BERTHEMY's successor. He has already engaged a house here—the one vacated by Señor ROSSETTI, the Spanish Minister, the latter having taken one on the corner of Thirteenth and K streets.

MARRIAGE OF THE SPANISH MINISTER.

Señor ROSSETTI, who will leave for New-York to-morrow, will soon return hither with his bride. His marriage with Miss FERRY will take place at St. Stephen's Church at 7½ P. M. on the 30th inst. Cards have been sent to the members of the Cabinet and the foreign representatives in Washington. The cards are to be shown at the church door.

THE ELECTION OF A KING OF SPAIN.

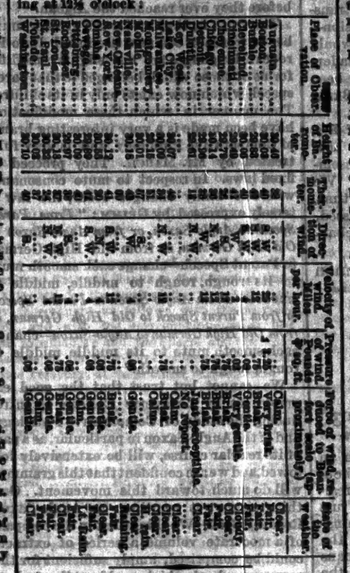
Our Government several days ago was officially advised of the election of a King of Spain. A telegram from Minister SICKLES states the same fact with no comment.

THE RUSSIAN QUESTION.

None of our Ministers at European Courts have communicated their views respecting the complications growing out of Russia's designs, and therefore the Administration has no information other than what has appeared in the newspapers.

Meteorological Record.

The following is the Signal Service report of the state of the weather and wind this morning at 12½ o'clock:



Highway Robbery in Newark—A Gang Broken Up.

On the 31st of last month the Democrats of the Seventh Ward, in Newark, held a meeting for the nomination of a candidate for Assemblyman. Directly after the meeting Mr. EDWARD MCGRATH, a leading politician in the ward, was knocked down in Newark-street by an unknown party, and after the ruffians had kicked and pounded him severely they stole his watch and escaped. The next day Mr. MCGRATH learned that a fellow named PATRICK FITZPATRICK was the ring-leader of the gang, and so reported at Police head-quarters to the detectives. A warrant was issued for him and "others to be identified." As the detectives worked up the case they learned that FITZPATRICK was not the man they wanted, and Detective FISCHER ascertained that the real chief offender was JAMES FITZGERALD, of Mechanic-street, and several nights has been lying in wait for him. On Saturday morning he found him on Washington-street, and immediately arrested him. Mr. MCGRATH at once recognized him as the principal in the robbery, and he was committed without bail. As evidence of the guilt of the prisoner, his mother and wife have waited on Mr. MCGRATH since the attack and expressed a desire to settle the matter, but without avail. JAS. FITZGERALD is one of the leaders of a gang of ruffians in the Seventh Ward, who style themselves KU-KLUX, and are a terror to respectable citizens, and his arrest may go a great way toward breaking up the party of lawbreakers.

Weston's Walk.

Mr. WESTON, the pedestrian, commenced his walk of 400 miles in five days at the Empire Rink this morning, at 12¼ A. M. He has been for the past five days entirely in the hands of Drs. FLINT, DORREMUS, MOTT and several others, who are engaged in experimenting upon diet and training. WESTON was weighed prior to commencing his task, and brought down the scale at 139 pounds, being trained, as it seemed, to the knowing ones a trifle too fine. He supped in company with young DORREMUS, the son of the famous chemist, at the Rink building, on beefsteak, fried eggs, toast, tea and stew, all the items of diet being weighed before consumed by the pedestrian. Shortly after 12 WESTON entered the scene of the walking, accompanied by OLE BULL, the violinist, and Drs. FLINT and DORREMUS. He was dressed in his usual costume of black velvet, white silk hat, blue sash, white kid gloves, and gold-mounted riding-whip. The six judges took their seats, with pencils and a chronographic watch; the word "go" was given, and he started off at a mild pace, accompanied by FLINT and DORREMUS, but after passing the stand twice he quickened his pace and was shortly left alone in his glory. The first mile was made in 13:08, the second in 11:47, and this pace was kept up for twenty miles, after which WESTON went to bed, and will recommence walking this morning at 8 o'clock.

A Sharp Swindle—A Heavy Clothing-House in Newark "Taken in."

During Saturday evening a prepossessing young man, with a light-colored mustache and gentlemanly bearing, entered the clothing-store of HALSEY, HUSTED & HALSEY, on Broad-street, Newark, and wished to be shown a fine overcoat. The obliging salesman showed him through the stock, till at last the young man hit upon one which suited his complexion and his purse. There was but one drawback to the purchase—he would like to let his mother see it before he fully decided. He told the salesman let a boy go with him to the house, and either bring back the money or the coat? Certainly. The boy and the nice young man started together to a remote section of the City, and entered a house together. The boy was left in a waiting-room while the coat was exhibited to the mother in another apartment. Soon the purchaser returned to the boy. Said he had decided to take it, and gave him a check in payment, with which he started for the store. The check was worthless, and on sending to the house to regain the coat it was ascertained that the landlady knew nothing of the young man except that he had applied for board on Saturday, and came in the evening to say that she need not expect him, as he had made different arrangements. The coat and the nice young man have not been heard from.

Incendiary Fire in Newark—Loss $10,000.

At a very early hour yesterday morning the Newark Fire Department was turned out to quell the flames which had evidently been kindled by an incendiary, on Marshall-street, near Prince-street, in that city. The fire originated in a barn owned by EDWARD KROMER, a contractor. The barn and its contents, consisting of three horses, a valuable cow, two goats, hay, fodder, &c., were burned. The flames communicated to a two-story frame house adjoining, which was also owned by Mr. KROMER, but was occupied by a German and an Irish family. The house was also completely destroyed, and the families lost some of their furniture. The loss is estimated at about $10,000, and was only partially covered by insurance. At about 1 o'clock yesterday morning, a fire was also discovered in a room in a shoe on Commerce-street. The shop adjoined a coal-yard, and only the prompt action of Officer ALLEN and a few citizens, who extinguished the flames, prevented a large and destructive conflagration.

A Man Stabbed Six Times.

An altercation occurred last evening between JOHN BURNS, of No. 159 East Forty-second-street, PHILIP MCGUIRE, of No. 1,028 Third-avenue, and JOHN FERRIS, a quarryman, as they stood at the corner of Sixty-first-street and Third-avenue. During the fight which ensued BURNS was stabbed six times about the head and body, one wound being in the small of the back and probably of a fatal character. He was removed to Bellevue Hospital, where he remains in a critical condition. Both MCGUIRE and FERRIS were arrested by the Nineteenth Precinct Police, and held for examination.

POLITICAL.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Result of the Elections—Speeches of Governor, Lieutenant-Governor and Representatives to Congress—Majorities—Contests—Racon—Members at Large.

From Our Own Correspondent.

COLUMBIA, Tuesday, Nov. 15, 1870.

Now that the political dust and smoke of the election battles has entirely cleared away, we may profitably take a glance at the results, and see what kind of men are the victors in the spirited campaign and hard-fought battle.

GOVERNOR AND LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR.

Gov. ROBERT K. SCOTT, a white man, just re-elected to that office, is an immigrant from Ohio. His biographical record is too well known to need repetition at this time. Hon. B. F. WHITEMORE, who was ejected from Congress some months ago, drew up the platform of the party for this campaign, and is a leader among the Scott factionists of the Republican Party in South Carolina. Gov. SCOTT is popular with the negroes and exceedingly distasteful to the whites.

Lieut. A. J. RAMSEY, is a bright mulatto, native of Charleston, who sprang to the front of his race in 1865 so promptly as to secure the leadership among them, without possessing either superior abilities or education.

REPRESENTATIVES TO CONGRESS.

The Representative from the First District, in the Congress of the United States, is Mr. JOSEPH H. RAINEY. He is a bright mulatto, native of Georgetown, S. C., and before the war, some years, was a barber at the Mills House, in Charleston. In the war he was steward for several trips on a blockade-running steamer, plying between Charleston and Nassau, N. P.; did good service upon the Confederate earth-works near Fort Sumter; was Senator from Georgetown County in the Legislature of 1868-70. In the late campaign RAINEY became a violent partisan of the Scott interests, and made some strong anti-white-men speeches. His education consists of reading, writing, a little arithmetic, and whatever he has been able to pick up in the way of general information during his public service of a little over two years. His opponent was Mr. C. W. DUDLEY, a white man, Democrat, native of the State, having formerly been State Senator. The district is overwhelmingly negro, as appears in the vote. The total vote was 23,071; and of these DUDLEY received only 3,182, while RAINEY received 20,385—a majority of 17,101. In comparing these figures, however, it must be remembered that no voter at all was polled for DUDLEY in the counties of Clarendon, Kershaw, Lancaster, Marion, Sumter and Williamsburg—more than half the counties in the district. The whites in the counties merely refused to vote where there was no hope of success. RAINEY fills the seat held once by WHITEMORE, and is a far more honest man, although a white quadroon.

SECOND DISTRICT.

The Congressional Representative of the Second District elected is Mr. ROBERT C. DE LARGE—a native of Charleston, a mulatto combining the negro and the Hebrew races, his father being a Jew. This appears in his face. Served during the war on a blockade-runner and gentleman's waiter. Was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1868; and served through the first Legislature as Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. He is a glib speaker, quick at repartee, voluble, and much on the floor. He was perhaps the most influential colored member of that body, and wielded a great influence over it. Dr. LARGE's opponent in this campaign was Mr. C. C. BOWEN, (white,) member of last Congress. The contest was exceedingly bitter, turning largely upon the question of color. BOWEN is preparing to contest the election; and sportsmen are already offering bets on BOWEN. Both are Republicans; but DE LARGE belongs to the Scott faction, which now controls in this State. DE LARGE combines the shrewdness of the Jew with the intuitive cleverness of the negro, and is pre-eminently the man for his race. The vote was close. Out of 32,325 votes, DE LARGE got 16,606, and BOWEN 15,700—a majority of only 906 for DE LARGE.

THIRD DISTRICT.

The Congressional Representative of the Third District—formerly HOGE's—is Col. ROBERT BROWN ELLIOTT, who is a full negro. He comes from Massachusetts, and is a bitter enemy of the white race; is a man of mark among his race, being bold, ambitious, and ready at speech. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention, and as a member of the first General Assembly he won distinction (not in every respect enviable) as Chairman of the Committee on Railroads. The vote of this district is 34,521, of which ELLIOTT got 20,544 and his opponent—Col. JOHN E. BACON, a native white—got 13,977; making ELLIOTT's majority 6,567. Col. BACON is a lawyer of ability and distinction in Edgefield County, a son-in-law of Gov. PICKENS, and in every way a deserving man of mark and character.

FOURTH DISTRICT.

The Congressional representative of the Fourth District is the incumbent, Mr. ALEXANDER S. WALLACE, a native white of extreme party views. Mr. WALLACE was seated in the last Congress, although the majority was 4,91 against him. This contest the election returns show a majority for him of 3,504. This difference of 7,595, in a district voting only 30,189, is not to be accounted for by any changes of votes, but by the difference in the way of managing the election. This difference, I understand, is to be shown before Congress by Col. MCKISSICK, the defeated opponent of Mr. WALLACE, in the protest to be pushed as soon as Congress meets. Their respective votes were: WALLACE, 16,746, and MCKISSICK, 13,242.

THE RESULT IN BRIEF.

The South Carolina delegation—to sum up—consists of three natives and one Massachusetts man. Of these four, again, two are native mulattoes, (or white quadroons,) one native white, and one imported negro. All are extreme Republicans in politics. Besides these four, there were elected two from the State at large—prospectively elected in view of the new arrangement resulting from the census of 1870. It is not expected that these will be admitted however. These two are LUCIUS WIRTHMORE, bright mulatto, of Chester County, and J. P. M. EFFING, a German white, celebrated years ago in the North as the preparer of the Epping's Compound Syrup of Sarsaparilla and Queen's Delight. Both Radicals. BOISE.

POLITICAL NOTES.

Republican majority in the First District of Minnesota is nearly 5,000.

Ex-Gov. CURTIN says that the earnest effort about to be made to secure a general revision of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, must meet with the cordial approval, and enlist the positive efforts of the best men of both parties, for the necessity of thorough reform is painfully apparent to all.

Complete official returns from Maryland give the following result: First Congressional District, Republican, 13,228; Democratic, 17,602; Democratic majority, 4,174; Second District, Republican, 8,062; Democratic, 14,622; majority, 6,560; Third District, Republican, 10,414; Democratic, 18,197; Fourth District, Republican, 12,426; Democratic, 14,206; majority, 1,818; Fifth District, Republican, 13,437; Democratic, 15,231; majority, 1,794.

The Virginia Republican State Committee is called to meet in Richmond on the 14th of December, to "consider subjects of the greatest importance."

The New-Hampshire Democrats will hold their State Convention to nominate candidates for Governor and Railroad Commissioner, in Concord, on Wednesday, Jan. 11. The Congressional Convention for the First District is to be held, in Dover, Jan. 12; that for the Second District, in Manchester, Jan. 18, and that for the Third, in Hanover, on the same day.

Portsmouth, N. H., has its municipal election to-morrow. The Republican candidate for Mayor accepted the nomination in these few words: "Gentlemen, I accept. I am very much obliged, and thank you. If elected, I will endeavor to perform my duty to the best of my ability, and hope to your satisfaction."

Gen. SCHENCK says he will not contest Hon. LEWIS D. CAMPBELL's right to a seat in Congress as Representative from the Third District of Ohio, and that if any contest is made, it will be by the Republicans of the district. He evidently regards as binding the decision of the Ohio Supreme Court, under which the vote of the soldiers in the Home, at Dayton, was refused by the election judges, on the ground that they were not citizens of the State of Ohio.

The St. Paul (Minn.) Press calls Gen. BEN. BUTLER the "stormy petrel" of American politics.

A Massachusetts Republican, JAS. FOORD, of Dedham, received the flattering compliment of a unanimous vote for Register of Deeds of Norfolk County, at the State election. Nearly 10,000 citizens voted for him.

Republicanism in New-Jersey.

The election in New-Jersey, as already announced, resulted in the success of the Republicans by an aggregate majority of over 4,000 votes on Congressmen, a gain of one representative, and of several members of the State Legislature, so as to give them a majority in both branches, and secure the return of a Republican to the United States Senate, to succeed Mr. CATTELL, for six years from March 4, 1871. The official canvass will be formally proclaimed by the Board of State Canvassers, which meets at Trenton, on the 29th inst., at 2 P. M. The returns have, however, been filed in the respective counties, and from them we compile some details.

The Republicans elect Mr. HAZELTON in the First District by 2,048 majority; Mr. HILL in the Fourth by 2,762, and Mr. HALSEY (gain) in the Fifth by 3,301, making a total of 8,097. The Democracy elect Mr. FORKER in the Second district by 447, and Mr. Bird in the Third by 3,616, a total of 4,063. Messrs. HAZELTON and FORKER are new members, the former succeeding Mr. MOORE, Republican, and the latter Mr. HARGET, Democrat. Messrs. BIRD and HILL are re-elected—the latter for his third term. Mr. HALSEY succeeds Mr. CLEVELAND, and was the member in 1867-68, having been defeated for re-election by Mr. CLEVELAND, whom he now in turn has beaten. Mr. RAFFERTY, who was beaten by Mr. HILL in the Fourth District, was also beaten by him in 1869. Messrs. HINRY and HILL were formerly members of the State Legislature, the former in 1861 and 1862, and the latter in 1862 and in 1866; in the last year he was chosen Speaker of the Assembly. Mr. NEWELL, who was defeated by Mr. FORKER in the Second District, was elected in 1864, and beaten in 1866 by Mr. HAGHER.

In the State Senate, which will stand twelve Republicans to nine Democrats, the Republicans gain four members—one each in Cape May, Burlington, Middlesex and Passaic Counties, and elect the member in Morris to succeed the late Senator COMLY. The Democrats retain Sussex and Hunterdon, the former by a greatly reduced majority. The following is the vote in the respective counties: Republican—Cape May, 408; Burlington, 155; Middlesex, 515; Passaic, 594; Morris, 1,093. Democratic—Sussex, 670; Hunterdon, 1,681. In Cape May, Mr. Beesley, who was defeated by Mr. Rice, Democrat, in 1867, is elected over that gentleman, and Burlington elects Mr. Irick, who was also defeated in 1867. Of the next Senate, seven members have been also members of the Assembly—Mr. Beesley, of Cape May, in 1866, '67, '69 and '70; Mr. Irick, of Burlington, in 1865, '66 and '68; Mr. Nixon, of Cumberland, in 1866, '67 and '68; Mr. Taylor, of Hudson, in 1866 and '67; Mr. Bangham, of Hunterdon, in 1863 and '64; Mr. Jarrard, of Middlesex, in 1864, '66, '67 and '70, and Mr. Beach, of Morris, in 1869 and '70. Mr. Beetle, of Camden, is on his second term, Mr. Little, of Monmouth, on his third term and Mr. Edsall, of Sussex, on his second. Of the defeated candidates Mr. Lippincott, of Burlington, was a member of the Assembly in 1867, '68 and '69, and Mr. Applegate, of Middlesex, served one term several years since. Messrs. Rice, of Cape May, and Hopper, of Passaic, had served one term each in the Senate.

The Assembly will stand 34 Republicans to 26 Democrats, a Republican gain of eight. The Republicans gain one member in Burlington, one in Camden, two in Essex, three in Hudson, one in Mercer, one in Middlesex, and one in Passaic. The Democrats gain two in Salem and one in Union. Of the sixty members, twenty-two of them are re-elected, seven were previously members and thirty-one or about one half are new legislators. The Republicans re-elect eleven—Messrs. Overheiser, of Atlantic; Alcott, of Burlington; House of Cumberland; Sankey, Kitchell and Wilson, of Essex; Woolery, of Gloucester; Barton, of Mercer; Runyon, of Middlesex; Bradshaw, of Ocean, and Staats, of Somerset. The Democrats re-elect eleven: Messrs. Hopper, of Bergen; Maxwell and Perkins, of Burlington; Grossup, of Cumberland; Busch, (the heavy man,) of Hudson; Kugler, of Hunterdon; Patterson, of Monmouth; Blanck, of Union; Purnell, Valentine and Silverthorn, of Warren. Of the latter number, Mr. Valentine, who was thrown overboard in the regular caucus for failure to support all the Democratic measures last Winter, ran as an independent candidate, and was supported by the Republicans. Of the defeated candidates, Messrs. Evans, of Salem, and Drake, of Union, Republicans, and Messrs. French, of Burlington; Williams, of Essex; Hudnut, of Mercer; Brown, of Middlesex, and Hobbs, of Passaic, Democrats, were members of the last Assembly. Mr. Arrowsmith, of Somerset, who ran as an independent Democratic candidate, and was beaten by Mr. DOTY, the regular nominee, was also a member last year and some years since, as were also Messrs. Albertson, of Camden, and Holmes, of Essex. Of the members elect Mr. Maxwell, of Burlington, enters on his fourth term, Messrs. Alcott, House, Woolery, Staats, Valentine and Purnell on their third. Messrs. Irwin, of Essex, Coogar, of Hudson, and Hemingway, of Passaic, were members in 1869, and the latter two were beaten last year. Mr. Condit, of Essex, was a member in 1866 and 1867; Mr. Brucre, of Mercer, in 1868 and 1869, and Mr. Nicholson, of Camden, in 1864 and 1865, and Mr. Patterson, of Monmouth, in 1860 and 1861, when he was also Speaker. Among the new members is R. S. LEAMING, from Cape May County, who is the fifth descendant of the family that held the same office. In fact they have been represented since the formation of the Government, his father, grandfather, great-grandfather and great-great-grandfather having all been representatives in the State Legislature.

The Legislature of New-Jersey will meet on Jan. 10, 1871, at 3 P. M., and among the first business will be the election of a Senator in the United States Senate, for which the prominent candidates are Senator A. G. CATTELL, Ex-Senator F. T. FRELINGHUYSEN, and CORTLANDT PARKER, Esq.—the latter a prominent Newark lawyer. The Presidency of the Senate conceded to Mr. BETTLE, of Camden, and the speakership of the Assembly will lie between Mr. CONDIT, of Essex, Mr. BARTON, of Mercer, and Mr. HOUSE, of Cumberland, with probabilities in favor of the former. The redistricting of the State under the new census, and a large amount of local legislation, will come up for consideration during this session, which promises to be one of the most important ever held in the State.

CITY WAR NEWS.

The German War Fund Collections.

Consul-General JOHANNES ROMBERG, on Saturday, transmitted another remittance of 20,000 thalers to the Central Station at Berlin, the latest contributions to the fund in aid of the wounded soldiers in Germany. This makes with previous remittances, amounting to 200,000 thalers, a total of 200,000 thalers transmitted from the General Consulate to Germany. The amount of subscriptions received at the General Consulate amounted to $14,160 97, inclusive of $11,162 49, the proceeds of a German ladies' fair at Cincinnati. The subscriptions during the past week also include $1,441 18, contributed by the Germans at Syracuse, N. Y.; $131 by the Germans at Chateaugay, Ill.; $50 from Lawrence County, Ohio; $125 by the German Patriotic Aid Society of Florence, Mass., the amount of the collections in the villages of Northampton, Florence and Williamsburg, Mass.; $100 by the Germans at Gebhuse, Iowa, and $400 by the German Patriotic Aid Society at Yonkers, Westchester County. The next was contributed from various sources in this City. The German Patriotic Society of the Fourth Ward in this City, which heretofore contributed $234, have raised $150 in addition lately, which will be paid over to the Consul-General for transmission.

The New-York Maennerchor, a German vocal organization of recent origin, on Saturday paid over to the Consul-General $370, the proceeds of a concert given by this society, a week ago at Terrace Garden, in aid of the relief fund.

ANGLO-SAXON AND ENGLISH. A Comparative Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon Language; in which its forms are illustrated by those of the Sanskrit, Greek, Latin, Gothic, Old Saxon, Old Frisic, Old Norse and Old High-German. By FRANCIS A. MARCH, Professor of the English Language and Comparative Philology in Lafayette College. HARPER & BROTHERS.

We heartily join with the author of this volume in giving "thanks to the Trustees and Faculty of Lafayette College, who were the first to unite in one professorship the study of the English language and comparative Philology, and who have set apart time for these studies, and funds for the necessary apparatus to pursue them." This work, and the author's admirable essay on the "Method of Philological Study of the English Language," are abundant evidence of the ability and industry with which Mr. MARCH has performed the duties of his professorship.

Philology, in its broad sense, has now come to be recognized as one of the most important branches of history. The language of a people is not merely a vehicle for recording and transmitting its deeds and thoughts, but the formation and development of it are its highest achievement, and when reduced to writing its most lasting monument. The Hebrew language has outlasted by five-and-twenty centuries every material work of the people who spoke it. When there shall not be a vestige of the Parthenon or the Pantheon, the words spoken by HOMER and PLATO, by VIRGIL and CICERO, will remain to mankind a possession forevermore. MACAULAY's New-Zealander may not be able to discover a vestige of Westminster Abbey or St. Paul's, but he will find "Hamlet" and "Othello," Paradise Lost, and Pilgrim's Progress.

Until within a few years it was thought that the languages of Northern Europe differed as widely from the so-called "classic" languages as these do from the Semitic tongues. It is now recognized that the great group of languages of which this Grammar treats, and consequently those who spoke them, belong to one great family, which for four thousand years—and how much longer no man knows—have been utterly distinct from another great group, both spoken and written by peoples far advanced in civilization. The first group, for want of better terms, we may call Japetan; the second, Semitic. We here leave out of view the Mongol and African races. The original seat of the Japetan race was in the highlands of Central Asia; from thence they spread southward to India and northward to Europe, avoiding the Semites to the east, and the Mongols to the west. It is clear that they had a single language, which in the course of time, and during their numerous migrations, has undergone various modifications, but whose character was so firmly fixed, that all these languages, Sanskrit, Greek, Teutonic, in their manifold modifications are now classed together as "Indo-European." Contemporaneous with these, from the earliest historic period, were the Semitic tongues. The synchronism of the early records of these two families of languages is noteworthy. The Sanskrit Vedas belong to the same age with the Books of Moses. The Iliad, and the Psalms belong to the same period. ÆSCHYLUS and EURIPIDES were nearly contemporaneous with ISAIAH and EZEKIEL. But the languages in which the great Japetic and Semitic writers expressed themselves present hardly an analogy. They differ not merely in words, but in what is of far more importance, in internal structure.

Taking the Greek and the Hebrew as types of the two families of language, their inherent differences may be seen almost at a glance. The Greek abounds in particles and connectives. The Hebrew is almost destitute of them; two or three conjunctions and half a dozen prepositions have to do duty for the whole class, so that the various relations of thought cannot be clearly and definitely expressed. The Greek abounds in adjectives and adverbs; of these the Hebrew is almost bare; so that to express the quality of a thing or act it must resort to a cumbrous circumlocution. The Hebrew noun has, strictly speaking, no cases; to express even the possessive it slightly varies the word for the thing possessed, not that for the thing possessing. But the great difference consists in the development of the verb—the "word" by eminence in every language. In one important respect, the Hebrew verb is far more fully developed than the Greek. The Greek has three voices—active, passive and reflexive, the last existing as a distinct form in only a few moods and tenses. The Hebrew has eight voices, (by the grammarians styled conjugations) simple active, simple passive, intensive active, intensive passive, causative active, causative passive, reflexive active, reflexive passive, all of which are marked by prefixes, duplication of consonants, and vowel changes. The difference of gender is also marked in the verb. But there are, properly speaking, no tenses, the two forms being really aorists, not in themselves telling whether an action is past, present or future. To express positively that an action is past, a circumlocution has to be employed. The Hebrew verb also has no moods, except the indicative and imperative. Thus, while, for the purpose of simple narrative, or of lofty poetry, the Hebrew is fully adequate, it is altogether insufficient for the expression of philosophy or exact science. And as a language is an exponent of the character of the people who framed it, the inherent differences between the Japetic and Semitic languages indicates a like difference in the mental and moral constitution of the races.

The English language is in many respects the most remarkable of the great Indo-European family. Apparently it is hardly four centuries old; and yet really and essentially it is the same which was spoken in Central Asia untold generations before any recorded history. The peoples who wandered north and south from the central spot, each dropped some parts of their language and acquired others. We have swept into our treasury all their accumulated wealth. We have taken their current money and received it; sometimes, indeed, debasing, but oftener purifying it. To know the value of our current coin we must know of what it is composed. So, to understand our own language thoroughly we must study those from which it has come to us. The importance, in this respect, of the study of Greek and Latin is universally acknowledged. We affirm that the study of the Anglo-Saxon is of equal, and in some respects of still higher importance.

Cultivated languages, so long as they are living tongues, have a twofold aspect. One, as they are manifested in current speech; the other, as they appear in literature. No man talks just as authors write, unless, like COLERIDGE, he talks essays. "Did you ever hear me preach?" asked COLERIDGE of LAMB. "I never heard you do anything else," was the reply. To say that a man "talks like a book," is to say that he talks badly. JOHNSON kept his sesquipedalian words and laboriously balanced sentences for the Rambler, and the Lives of the Poets; his table-talks, as preserved by BOSWELL, and his familiar letters, are as free and racy as that which we hear every day. "When we were taken upstairs he came to Mrs. THRALE, "a dirty fellow thrust out of the bed on which one of us was to lie." This, in his Journey to the Hebrides, is translated into Johnsonese as follows: "Out of one of the beds on which we were to repose, started up, on our entrance, a man black as a Cyclops from the forge." In some departments of modern literature, that of fiction especially, an effort has been made to reproduce and perpetuate the actual language of the times. But in Greek and Latin there is nothing of this. The language of the house and the street, of the forum and agora, has utterly perished. The nearest remaining approach to it is in the letters of CICERO, and the dialogues of LUCIAN, for the characters of ARISTOPHANES and TERENCE are not representative of the people, and so their speech is not representative of the current language. But the Anglo-Saxon speech was cut short in its course before it had reached the point of development as a literary language. Hence its written remains are, both in words and construction, fragments of the spoken speech. Here history and philology illustrate and confirm each other.

At least as early as 400 A. D. we find the shores of the Baltic in firm possession of Teutonic branches of the Japetic stock. History fails to tell us when and why this people left their old homes and set off in different directions to do their part in fulfilling the primeval ordinance to subdue the earth and replenish it. Some, we know, went southward to the fertile plains of India; others northward, skirting that stormy inland ocean, which they rightly named "Ἄξεινος, "the Inhospitable," which name was afterward changed, as if to avert the evil omen, to Εὔξεινος, "the Hospitable," but which is styled by the present dwellers on its shore "the bad Black Sea." Here again they diverged; one part spread themselves southward to the Mediterranean, over what became Hellas, and thence over Ausonia or Italia; the other branch pressed on still northward and westward, until, following the course of the great rivers, they found themselves, after well-nigh a score of centuries, on the shore of the North Sea. For more than a thousand years after this separation the three great branches of emigrants never heard of each other; and each wrought out its own destiny independently of the others.

The Indian branch, whom we will call Sanskrits, framed that stupendous system of mythology and philosophy, which, their language having been reduced to writing, was embodied in the Vedas. The Hellenes, under the bright skies which overarched their new home, became Greeks and Latians; invented Zeus and Father Jove; built Argos, and Athens, and Sparta; produced HOMER and ÆSCHYLUS, THUCYDIDES, PLATO, DIMOSTHENES and ARISTOTLE, VIRGIL, LUCRETIUS, CICERO and HORACE, and then descending the whole rabble rout of Olympian deities and demigods, embraced the faith of the divine Galilean. Meanwhile, the Teutons, in their cold homes, grew more slowly, but as history has shown and is yet to show, more surely, into culture. But the one great thing is that in all these long wanderings, the Japetic race bore with them, and kept, with more or less change, their common language, which, in spite of the chances and changes of so many centuries, is now shown to be essentially that spoken in their original seat in Central Asia.

Five centuries after the birth of our Saviour, and two centuries after the Cross had become the symbol of the Roman Empire, the Teutons, who had occupied the North Sea shores, had never heard of the crucified One. The Saxons and Angles who, in the fifth and sixth centuries, finding their homes near the mouth of the Elbe too strait for them, crossed the narrow waters and overrun Britain, were pagans. Pagans they remained for generations in their new home, which had come to be known as Angle-land, or as we now say, England. Long after the southern part of the European continent had become Christian, the peoples of the Saxon Heptarchy in Britain were performing savage rites in the rude temples of Thor and Wodin.

About six hundred years after Christ, (the precise year is put down as 597 A.D.) Christian missionaries were sent from Rome to Britain. We wish that we could accept as authentic the stories which have come down to us of the origin and success of this mission. As the legends run, GREGORY, the great Roman Pontiff, walking one day in the market-place, saw a "bright-haired company of youthful slaves" exposed for sale. "Who are these?" asked the Holy Father. "They are Angles," was the reply. "Angles! they look to me like angels," said GREGORY. "And who is their king? "The Saxon ÆLLA." "The people of the heathen ÆLLA must be taught to sing Christian alleluias," rejoined the Pontiff. Whereupon a mission was organized, at the head of which were AUGUSTINE or AUSTIN, (not the famous Bishop of Hippo, in Africa, who lived two centuries earlier,) and PAULINUS, of the "eagle-beak," who, in some monkish legends, has apparently got confounded with PAUL, the Apostle, who lived five centuries before. PAULINUS, so runs another legend, presented himself before one of the Heptarchs, and stated his mission. The matter was referred to the chief of the heathen priests. "Man's soul," said the old man, "is like a sparrow, which flies from the cold and darkness into the warm and lighted room where we sit rejoicing; and then, after brief tarry, flies out again into the darkness. We know not whence it comes or whither it goes? If this stranger can tell us of that, let us hear him." Whereupon, so runs the legend, PAULINUS spake; the hearers were convinced, and the throng, the chief priest leading, rushed out, burnt their idol, and were baptized as Christians.

However much or little there may be of truth in these legends, this much is certain: The Saxons of England were speedily converted to Christianity. AUSTIN, the Benedictine monk, became the first Archbishop of Canterbury, and Metropolitan of all England; and for well nigh twelve centuries his successor has been first peer of the realm, ranking next to the sovereign whom he crowns. The Cathedral of Canterbury was gradually built and enlarged through six centuries, having been finished, as it now stands, about 1200 A. D. The present Archbishop has two magnificent palaces, and is patron of a hundred and fifty livings.

The early missionaries set themselves, in many ways, earnestly to their work. Not the least of this was to reduce the language of the Angles to writing. They found the alphabet which the Greeks had borrowed from the Phœnicians, and the Latins from the Greeks, in the main adequate for the purpose. The alphabet which they adopted consisted of twenty-four letters. Of these, nineteen were the same as in the Latin, the difference being that a (our a in far,) was made different from æ (our a in dare;) that e always had the sound of ĕ; and i, g, v, were omitted. For two sounds of frequent occurrence they found no Latin equivalents: the aspirated t, our th in thin; and w. For these they invented characters. The forms of the other letters, as written, were the same as in the Latin of the day. At first they [illegible] exactly what we now call Gothic.

By the middle of the eighth century the language of Britain had assumed a single form, and was styled English, the same which we now call Anglo-Saxon. This language existed as a spoken and written tongue for more than three centuries, its golden period being during the reign of the great ALFRED, (A. D. 870-900.) Shortly afterward it began to be corrupted by the influence of the Normans, and after the conquest by WILLIAM it disappeared as a written language and as spoken by the upper classes, but it must have lived in the common heart and upon the common tongue.

There is a story of an Egyptian architect who built a magnificent temple, upon the solid granite doorway of which he carved his own name. This inscription he covered with a coating of plaster, on which he engraved the name of the monarch; and so, for a time, the temple purported to be the work of the King. But in the course of ages the plaster, with its adulatory inscription, peeled off, and the name of the long-forgotten architect reappeared, carved in enduring granite. Something like this happened in the case of the Anglo-Norman and the Anglo-Saxon languages. The slight Norman overlay fell away, and the enduring Saxon reappeared, somewhat marred by time and change. The language spoken by the Saxon ALFRED is today more intelligible than that spoken by the Norman RICHARD of the Lion-heart. And when WYCLIFFE (A. D. 1382) completed his translation of the Bible into English, his version—quite intelligible to us, but which would have been understood by few readers who lived in A. D. 1200—would have been perfectly intelligible to the venerable BEDE, who died A. D. 735.

A single stanza from the old Book of Hig, written about A. D. 650, will show how closely the Anglo-Saxon of that day resembles the English of our own time. We present it in the characters of the time, placing underneath the words expressed, without further change, in our present characters:

"Þeðe þungen þe Þunecher þinnen
Morie singen de Munecher binnen
Cly,
Big,
þa Þnuc clinq þep þenþy,
Da Cruc ching rew derby,
þopeþ cnicer neap þe lant,
Bowed enites near de lant,
Ánd heþe þe þer Þunecher þaenq."
And here we der Munecher sang.

Here is not a single word for which an ordinary reader of to-day, more than a thousand years after the lines were written, really needs a glossary. "Sung-en," is just "sung," with the indicative plural termination -en, and "row-ed," with that of the Imperative plural -ed, which the Germans have retained, and we, not at all for the better, have dropped. "Binnen" (by-in) is better than our "within." "Rew" ought, by all analogy, to be the preterite of "row," just as New is of "blow," grew of "grow," and knew of "know."

We have said that in course of time the forms of the letters of the Anglo-Saxon alphabet have been made like those of the Latin. To this there are two notable exceptions in the case of two of the non-Latin letters. The th is represented by þ, * þ*, and the w by þ, þ, characters which it needs a sharp eye to distinguish from each other and from our p, p, used also in Anglo-Saxon as now printed. This close similarity of character to represent three wholly dissimilar sounds, all of very frequent occurrence, is a decided evil. Unless one is on the watch, he will, for example, be apt to read þulf "pulf," and þudupa "pudupa," failing to perceive that these words are in sound, as well as in meaning, just our "wolf" and "widow." In þif he will hardly recognize "wife," and in cþen "queen," that is "woman." So, too, the þ, þ (th, Greek ϑ), which perhaps occurs more frequently in Anglo-Saxon than any other consonant, is easily misread for either p or þ; þet and þer look unfamiliar, and one may easily pass them over without recognizing them to be simply "that" and "there." The following sentence from the Anglo-Saxon Chronicles looks almost unintelligible: "þæt seldre þyncan þunderlic, gif ænig þer þam sceðe þæt þit spa geþurfan sceolde;" but if for the characters þ and þ, one will only substitute th and w, he will have little difficulty in reading it. "That would have [thinked] seemed wonderful, if anyone ere that had said that it should so happen." It is to be regretted that Mr. March had not completed the work of simplifying the alphabetic form of notation by using in his Grammar "th" in place of þ, and "w" for þ. His authority would have been ample sanction for the change.

In representing the German the Latin characters are fast superseding the Gothic. GRIMM's great German Dictionary is printed in Latin letters. In a short time all the European branches of the Japetic languages will, with the exception of the Greek, be represented by a uniform alphabet. The Greek alphabet, we suppose, is too firmly fixed to be changed. There is, indeed, no royal road to the learning of Comparative Philology, more than of anything else; but it is well to remove even slight obstacles, when of frequent occurrence.

There is a marked tendency in modern languages toward a simplification of grammatical forms. But the changes in the English from the old Anglo-Saxon forms are not, we think, altogether for the better. The dropping of the dual number is well. So, too, the omission in adjectives of the terminations denoting gender, number and case. But the dropping in nouns of a distinct form for the dative and accusative, and in verbs of any separate form for the plural, impairs the flexibility of the language. But as a whole, the verb in English is certainly more fully and better developed than in any other language. The Latin is defective in this, that it cannot distinguish definitely between the ideas "I love," and "I have loved," the imperfect tense being continuative, and the so-called perfect merely an aorist. The English, by means of its various auxiliaries, can express every shade of thought that can be conveyed by the Greek or Latin. The same is true of the German; but the English has an advantage over the German in its threefold form of conjugation: the simple, "I love," the intensive, "I do love," and the continuative, "I am loving." Between these three shades of affirmation, which to us seem so clearly marked, the German language is wholly incapable of discriminating.

While we can not too strongly express our debt to the great Hellenic and Latian writers for the thoughts embodied by them in their own tongues, the obligations of the English language, as a language, to those of Greece and Rome, is far less than is generally imagined, and those to the Anglo-Saxon proportionately greater. In structure, our speech is Saxon; or rather, as we are now taught by recent research, it belongs to that common speech from which all the Anglo-European languages have sprung. Where the Hellenes and Latians have deviated from this common speech, we have not followed them; [illegible] there was something so equal, [illegible] about his music. If CHOPIN is the grandest master of his art, welcome at all times, there may be certain periods when musical natures have other longings, and finds in the rich fruitfulness of GOTTSCHALK the food it craves. It is a music which never clogs, and is at times tinged with sadness and that depth of feeling which is the perfection of lyrical art. That his influence on piano music popularized a higher school is certain, and GOTTSCHALK's advent as an American, amid American art, marks an epoch in our musical history. Mrs. HENSEL's book comes most opportunely, and will, doubtlessly, be appreciated by those who, only knowing the graceful concert performer, are made better acquainted with the mysteries of his hidden life, and who will find, besides the divine fire of inspiration, a kindness of heart and a breadth of sympathy, which, without the book, they never would have dreamt had any existence.

NOTES FROM THE PEOPLE.

Mr. Vanderbilt's Accommodation Cars on Madison-Avenue.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

At the amusing interview of Mr. JOHN FOLEY with WILLIAM H. VANDERBILT, the other morning, the latter gentleman facetiously alluded to the accommodation of the people in Madison-avenue, and promised "that it would be continued as fast as possible; a large number of new cars were now being made for it," &c. Perhaps the readers of the TIMES may like to have my experience. I had heard a good deal at the meeting of the East-side Association of the superior cars on this fashionable avenue, their neatness, the civil conductors and careful drivers, &c., so I walked over to the present terminus of the road, at Eighty-sixth-street, the other morning, at 9. There was no car visible, but the starter expatiated on the beauty of the view toward Central Park, and I spent ten minutes gazing at his request. We commenced the journey, but were brought to a short stop by the red flag denoting a blast. The powder was either poor or the workmen were stupid, probably the latter, as they were corporation hacks, and we lost fifteen minutes. A little further down the avenue the driver espied a large truck directly across the track loaded with Belgian pavement. As the driver of the car and the John of the truck savored strongly of the Emerald Isle, they affiliated pleasantly, and nothing was said by the conductor about the obstruction to the road. We here lost another ten minutes; policemen were conveniently absent, so some of the passengers whistled and others swore. After this pleasant delay nothing occurred of note until we passed through the tunnel and reached the Thirty-second-street station; here the starboard horse cast a shoe, and as the animals seemed scarce in the stables of the Company, the conductor went across the way to an apple-stand, and had a light luncheon of apples, pie and candy while the horse was being shod. This last outrage was rather too much for the equanimity of the unfortunate passengers in that "accommodation" car, and we all hurled anathemas loud and deep against VANDERBILT, BROWN, the car superintendent, (who ought to have been on hand, but wasn't,) and horse-car generally. We reached the City Hotel in the Astor House in one hour and thirty-five minutes from Eighty-sixth-street and Madison-avenue!

It is well, as has been tritely remarked, to extract wisdom from annoyances, so while we were waiting for the Belgian pavement truck to get out of the way on Madison-avenue, three of us philosophic souls left the cars, and went to find out why the stone blocks of the Belgian were carefully laid down on one side of the avenue, and as carefully taken up on the other side, and excavations made for the sewer; we asked why the sewer was not laid first, and the street put down afterwards; a rather old man passenger, who somehow looked as though he belonged to that mysterious thing, the "Ring," after enjoying our surmises for awhile, told us that it was a characteristic of the rulers of the City to spend as much money as possible, so whenever a street or avenue was to be sewered and paved they were truly wise to lay the pavement first, then tear it up, build the sewer, and put the pavement down a second time. Sometimes, he observed, the Croton and gas pipes were forgotten, and in that case the roadbed was torn up three, and even four times; he formally asserted, however, that it was not so bad, as the City was rich, the people were good natured, and bore any amount of taxing without ever giving the slightest investigation to the subject.

I felt rather serious after this conversation, and concluded I would emigrate to New-Jersey, and yet sadly remember at times who are "used of City miasma.

JASPER.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Nov. 19, 1870.

The Government of New-York State and City.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The course of your paper pending the late canvass cannot be too highly commended. The result, if not as hoped for by many, is yet most instructive. It demonstrates positively, that as matters now are, the political complexion of the State is determined irrevocably by the corrupt and venal votes of this City and Brooklyn. The country is blamed for inaction. The reasons for their inactivity are obvious, and permanent in their effect. With a strictly fair vote in the State, as matters now are, money judiciously spent in these cities will carry the day. I reiterate what I have often expressed before, that large cities cannot be governed as the rural districts can be. There is a fatal want of unity of interests. The State should be territorially divided at once. It is a mistake to suppose that the new State, so created, would suffer permanently by separation. It is one of the fundamental conditions of its political purification.

2. Compulsory education is sufficiently indicated. Minority representation is probable. A subject less mooted, but even more necessary, is compulsory voting. I ask you to specially consider this point. The man who votes once is pointed out as criminal. The man qualified to do so, who does not vote once is equally criminal, and should be adequately punished. So far as large cities are concerned, not those only who reside in them should be compelled to vote. Those who do business here, and reside elsewhere, should be compelled to do so. I go further, and reflect on this subject. To an intelligent man there is no necessity for it. When the duty of voting is enforced by suitable penalties, the ax will have been laid to the root of the maladministration of large cities.

Respectfully yours, W. L. BARNES.

NO. 20 NASSAU-STREET, NEW-YORK, Friday, Nov. 18, 1870.

Mr. Astor and Mr. Connolly.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

You seem to labor to find an adequate inducement to Messrs. ASTOR and others to certify to the accuracy of the Controller's accounts, when invited by him to do so. Did it ever occur to you that to hesitate a moment it would have cost those gentlemen (large owners of real estate) many thousands of dollars, in taxation, if they incur the displeasure of the Ring? For instance: Take any piece of Mr. ASTOR's property, the Astor House, for instance, valued by the Assessor at much less than half its actual value; if ASTOR does not do the bidding of the Ring, the value of that building and hundreds of other parcels would be raised. ASTOR would be powerless, hence his ready compliance to obey the behests of the Ring. He is no fool; he knows his own interests. J. R. WEST.

NEW-YORK, Nov. 18, 1870.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Will you explain to an unsophisticated youth how such men as TWEED, CONNOLLY, FIELD and others are able to accumulate such large fortunes in a few years, when men like Ex-President LINCOLN, Ex-Secretary STANTON and others, continually thousands of millions of expenditures, die poor—in money?

If you don't know, perhaps Messrs. ASTOR and TAYLOR will be able to tell you, as they are so quick at figures. YOUNG MAN.

[We must refer our correspondent to the New-York World. That journal explained, some months ago, how TWEED, SWEENY & Co. made their fortunes—namely, by "swindling."]

The Whitewashing Firm of Astor, Taylor & Co.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Allow me, as one of the far from wealthy occupants of 25x100 feet of Manhattan soil, to express, through your columns, my deep gratitude to Messrs. ASTOR, TAYLOR & CO. for their disinterested aid in causing me to pay higher taxes this year. The public will, doubtless, be glad to know that Mr. ASTOR and Mr. TAYLOR have nearly recovered from the effects of their severe philanthropic labor, and are able to sit up at intervals and partake of their gruel.

They fully expect to win Prof. WAKE's prize of ten thousand dollars for the best rule for the equation of payments, and intend to devote fifteen dollars of it to charity. Does any one suppose that so laborious, so faithful, and so [illegible] kind a work was performed by such liberal men as J. J. ASTOR, MOSES TAYLOR, &c.? Impossible! The whole affair strongly reminds me of the old fable story about the court of inquiry held by the birds, where an old magpie persuaded three jack-daws to swear that he had not stolen corn from a peaceable family of rooks hard-by, although the jack-daws had largely shared his plunder. Yours ever, SAIRY GAMP.

POPULATION OF THE STATE

Complete Census Returns of New-York State by Counties—Comparison with the Returns of 1860 and 1865—Kings, Queens, Richmond and Suffolk Counties in Detail.

The census returns of the State of New-York for 1870 have just been completed, and the results will be found in one of the following tables by counties. In the same connection are given the figures of the years 1860 and 1865, showing the growth of population since those dates. The Counties of Kings, Queens, Richmond and Suffolk are given in detail. It will be seen that the population of New-York has increased 199,955 since 1865, and 112,072 since 1860; while Brooklyn has increased 100,238 and 126,079 since the same dates respectively. The population of the entire State has increased 430,069 within five years, and 490,111 within ten years past.

These are the figures:

The Constitutional Amendments in Michigan—Curious Results of the Vote on Equal Suffrage and the Railroad Bonds.

From the Detroit Post, Nov. 18.

From present appearances, the amendment to the State Constitution which proposes to strike out the word "white" from the suffrage clause is defeated. This, in a State which gives 30,000 Republican majority, would be astounding, if the figures did not offer an easy explanation. The amendment was of no practical importance; but, for the sake of its moral effect, it would have been to the credit of the State to have adopted it. It has been lost, if lost, on account of the indifference of those friendly to its embodied principles. We subjoin the votes of several counties from which reports have been received, to show the drift of feeling in regard to it:

	Rep. Yes.	Dem. No.
BARRY COUNTY.
State ticket	1,953	1,290
Impartial suffrage	1,894	1,351
CLINTON COUNTY.
State ticket	2,164	1,921
Suffrage	949	953
CASS COUNTY.
State ticket	1,819	1,693
Suffrage	1,323	1,551
JACKSON COUNTY.
Congress	3,958	3,352
Suffrage	339	3,347
KEWAUNEE COUNTY.
State ticket	471	165
Suffrage	346	121
SHIAWASSEE COUNTY.
State ticket	2,098	1,734
Suffrage	1,377	1,434
ST. JOSEPH COUNTY.
State ticket	2,628	2,070
Suffrage	1,456	2,272
WASHTENAW COUNTY.
State ticket	3,870	3,739
Suffrage	3,140	4,162

The votes from the southern part of the State betray a determined hostility to the validation of the railroad bonds. There is no reason to suppose that it will be overcome by the votes elsewhere. It is defeated by an overwhelming vote, which already foots up 20,000 majority. The other two clauses, which put railroad tariffs for freight and passengers under legislative control, and forbid the consolidation of competing lines, are carried by decided majorities. The clause increasing the salaries of the State officers and the Judges are also defeated by large majorities. The clause allowing Supervisors to borrow money, not to exceed $2,000, for the erection of bridges, is defeated. If the votes on these subjects express anything, one would say that the doctrine of the "Constitution as it is" is very popular in Michigan.

A Resolution on Base-Ball Playing—The Professional System to be Abandoned by the Red Stockings.

From the Cincinnati Inquirer, Nov. 18.

We learn, with some surprise, of a growing feeling in the Cincinnati Base-ball Club favorable to the abandonment of the system of playing paid players, and of entering the season of 1871 with a strictly amateur nine. Several causes have conduced to this result, the first and principal of which is the fact that it has been demonstrated, after a full and fair trial, that a club playing a professional nine cannot be made self-supporting, and that its treasury must be annually replenished by private and special contributions of members. Then, too, there is a strong minority in the club which believes that the original purpose and true interests of the national game would be better served by the playing of an amateur nine, which could be so organized that they would compare favorably with the State of Brooklyn, the Harvards, and other famous gentlemen players. This object once accomplished, the nine, it is argued, would at once resume its old tone, and become an amusement that would be eagerly sought and indorsed by all classes of the community. The game is no longer new in the West, and there is little doubt that nine volunteer players could be had here who would overmatch most of the professionals, even, who are becoming unmanageable, and many of whom a reputing a prohibitory tariff upon their services. This rumor will be of interest to clubs abroad who are seeking players. In this connection, it has been suggested that the club engage a nine of strictly Western players. There is talent enough in the West, if properly collected and managed, to defy all Eastern combinations, whether sailing from New-York, or New-York's Colony on the Lake.

GRATZ BROWN.

Speech of the Governor-Elect of Missouri—His Thanks to the Democracy—He Promises a Faithful Administration of the Office.

The following remarks were made by Hon. B. GRATZ BROWN, the Governor-elect of Missouri, on the night of the 15th inst., to a serenading party, headed by Col. D. H.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

Preparations for the Observance—The Programme at the Various Institutions—An Unprecedented Raid Upon Turkey Anticipated.

Since the observance of the primitive New-England "thanksgiving" has grown into a national feast-day, there have been many excellent improvements added, keeping pace with the progress of its popularity. It has called out an extraordinary amount of benevolent sympathy from all worthy members of society toward the poor and unfortunate, and every recurrence of the festival brings out more abundantly the general desire to have all classes enjoy the bounties that pour into the markets and crowd the stores. Not many seasons ago it was a difficult matter to obtain sufficient money and material to spread a limited table at the House of the Five Points Mission. The civil authorities also were quite chary in their provisions for the various prisons and other public institutions. This year, however, is far in advance even of the quite liberal arrangements of 1869, and there is every promise of the most extensive and complete preparations for banquets of plenty and rejoicings of such heartiness as never were dreamed of before. In the 240 benevolent systems—or branches—of various kinds now in established operation in the Metropolis, in the City's public institutions, including prisons, hospitals, asylums, almshouse, nurseries, &c., and by means of the very many religious agencies of other kinds and private instrumentalities, probably one hundred thousand men, women and children will be fed a good substantial meal, with not a few luxuries in addition. Many of these persons never taste of such food at any other time, and were it not for the kind-hearted and generous-handed sentiment that possesses the public mind on such an occasion, they would no more know the enjoyment of turkey, chicken and other concomitant dishes, than they would that of the choicest viands of a king's banquet. Those who have contributed to the expense of such benefaction, after looking upon the spectacle of these poor fellow-creatures enjoying their Thanksgiving dinner, generally feel inclined to increase the next year's donation. Let those who have never enjoyed such a happiness be sure and improve the opportunity that will be amply afforded on Thursday.

THE CITY INSTITUTIONS.

The inmates of the City institutions are amply provided for on this occasion. Poultry, beef, vegetables, and some minor luxuries, will be generously furnished, and tax-payers will find no fault with such expenditure. The Commissioners of Charities and Correction will personally superintend the general arrangements.

AT RANDALL'S ISLAND.

The boys and girls in the House of Refuge, to the number of about 900, will have a general holiday. Tables groaning under the weight of turkeys, chickens, meats, vegetables, plum dessert, with some fruit, will occupy all the space of the great dining hall. The Commissioners will be there to dine with them. Music and instrumental music, addresses, and a happy day generally will follow.

ON BOARD THE SCHOOL-SHIP.

The two hundred juvenile mimic "Jack Tars" on the school-ship at Hart's Island will have a day's "lark" with the Commissioners, teachers and friends. The banquet-board will be spread amidships on the saloon deck in a style that the genuine veteran man-of-war's-man does see. Amusements of various kinds, including some nautical drills and exercises, for the gratification of the visitors, will take place.

THE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

The industrial schools on Hart's Island will have their share of the festive arrangement. Two hundred of the little innocents will sit around the bountifully-furnished tables, and say with dramaticks, wings, and wish-bones, to their hearts' content. And the inmates of the Children's Hospital will also enjoy the goodies appropriate to a happy thanksgiving.

ON BLACKWELL'S ISLAND.

There are about 5,000 persons on Blackwell's Island, including the officials. Thanksgiving, Christmas, New-Year's and Fourth of July are the only holidays there. In the Lunatic Asylum are about 1,400 persons. In the Almshouse are about 1,400 feeble, infirm and otherwise wretched specimens of humanity. In the Charity Hospital are nearly 800 patients afflicted variously in body and estate; in the Workhouse are 500 individuals; in the Penitentiary are about 600. All of these will receive their measure of relaxation, comfort and pleasure on the occasion. The prisoners at the Penitentiary will thus enjoy more as the law does not contemplate any extra favors in their cases.

ON WARD'S ISLAND.

There are over 200 persons in the Soldiers' Retreat, on Ward's Island.

The Inebriate Asylum has about 100 inmates. In both institutions the inmates will receive such comforts or dainties as will suit their condition of mind and body.

IN BELLEVUE HOSPITAL.

There are nearly 1,000 patients in Bellevue Hospital. A considerable proportion of these are chronic cases of peculiar complaints. There are among them not a few, who have seen brighter and better days, and to whom the coming of this Thanksgiving Day will bring pangs of remembrance, and the review of glowing pictures of what has been and might have been. Delicacies for them will be generously and wisely dealt out.

THE CITY PRISONS.

The inmates of these institutions will not be neglected. At the Tombs, with its 300, Jefferson Prison, Essex Prison, and the up-town Prisons, there will be some agreeable changes from the ordinary prison fare.

THE CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY.

This Society will, as usual, provide liberally for its host of juvenile beneficiaries. Dinners will be given to 100 persons at the Rivington-street (No. 232) Lodging-house; 100 at No. 765 East Eleventh-street; 50 at No. 215 Eighteenth-street; 50 at No. 128 Bleecker-street; and to the newsboys at No. 40 Park-place. Three hundred of the latter will dine at 2 o'clock. Addresses and music may be expected. The various Industrial schools of the Society will have dinners on subsequent days.

THE FIVE-POINTS MISSION.

In the "Five Points," so altered and improved by new buildings, widened streets and a renovated population, there is almost no trace of former identity, this will be a day of rejoicing. At the Five Points M. E. Mission, on the site of the Old Brewery, a banquet will be given to over 1,000 children and adults. The recently enlarged accommodations will be entirely occupied by the multitude of polyglot guests. Dinner will be ready at Twelve o'clock M. Addresses and music will be not the least of the attractions.

THE HOUSE OF INDUSTRY.

At this, the largest institution of the kind in the City, 1,500 are to be feasted. The dinner will be set from 1 until 3 o'clock. After the children have eaten, the doors will be thrown open to all who will accept a seat. It is usually most affecting—men, women and children, pinched by hunger and want, flock to the tables. Services in the beautiful new chapel, recently finished, will continue from 12 until 1 o'clock. The sweet voices of the children will make happy melodies, interesting addresses from good speakers will be given.

THE HOWARD MISSION.

This year the good people of the Howard Mission will surpass their former admirable arrangements. Their new gem of a chapel will shine with the light of joyous faces, and echo to the delicious prattle, chatter and harmony of childish voices. Preparations are to be made to dine 1,500 between 12 and 4 o'clock. There will be a most attractive programme.

THE HOME FOR THE FRIENDLESS.

At this institution, in Thirteenth-street, near Fourth-avenue, there will be a donation visit from friends, and a banquet will be spread for some 1,500 persons at 4 o'clock. Exercises in the chapel will take place at 2 o'clock P. M.

THE MIDNIGHT MISSION.

At No. 53 Amity-street, a refuge and school for erring and fallen women who seek a better life, a feast will be given at 1 o'clock. At the House of Reception, at No. 60 Worth-street, a similar institution, there will also be a dinner at the same hour. Each has about thirty in its family circle, some of them educated and accomplished. Another similar home in Thirteenth-street, near Seventh-avenue, the "Magdalen Asylum," and the "House of Mercy," both on West Eighty-sixth-street, have about the same programme. The two latter institutions have about 100 inmates.

HOUSE OF THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

At the House of the Good Shepherd, at the junction of Ninety-eighth-street and the East River, a gladsome and ample feast for the 600 inmates will be provided. There will also be a special service and a fine dinner in the St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum, which cares for about 300 persons, on the opposite side of First-avenue.

OTHER INSTITUTIONS.

The Society of St. Vincent de Paul will give a dinner at its recently-established Newsboys' Lodging-house, in Warren-street. From fifty to 100 persons will be provided for.

The Hebrew Orphans, at the Asylum on the corner of Seventy-second-street and Third-avenue, will, by invitation of the trustees, attend service at the Fifth-avenue Synagogue, after which a grand dinner and pastimes will occupy the day. About 200 children are now inmates. The Hebrew Deaf and Dumb and Indigent Homes will also celebrate the day.

The soldiers and sailors in this vicinity will enjoy the occasion with extra relishes and will effect a great deal of fowl destruction. The inmates of the Sailors' Home in Cherry and Pearl streets, the Navy-yard, the forts and vessels, in and about the Harbor, will enjoy their meal of gratitude.

The inmates of the colored institutions, including the "Home," on Sixty-fifth-street and First-avenue, and the Orphan Asylum on Washington Heights, numbering some 300 persons, will feast upon the thank offerings of the season.

As all the other institutions, whose number is legion, a plentitude of the day's dainties and substantials will be provided. Among these are the "Sheltering Arms," several Orphan Asylums, Deaf, Dumb, Blind, Insane and Indigent Retreats. Altogether the observance promises to be very largely in advance of the record of previous years.

Two Burglars Arrested—A Brave Watchman.

During the past fortnight the spice and coffee grinding mills of LEOPOLD SCHEPP, at No. 180 Duane-street, have been visited by burglars no less than four times, who succeeded each time in carrying off considerable property. In one instance the thieves added arson to their other crimes, in the apparent hope of securing a favorable opportunity to carry off valuable plunder. Finding that no reliance could be placed upon the services of the Police, Mr. SCHEPP, determined to take the matter into his own hands, placed one of his employes, JOSEPH MITCHELL, on the watch. About 11 o'clock on Saturday night, MITCHELL saw a gang of five young men approach the premises, one of them having a dark lantern, and they made an effort to open the window of the engine-room. The volunteer watchman proved a reliable one, for he at once ran up and collared one of the burglars, the remainder of course making good their escape. The prisoner was at once escorted to the Station-house, where he gave his name as JOHN LYNCH, residing at No. 107 Bayard-street, and he was, yesterday morning, arraigned before Justice HOGAN at the Tombs to answer the charge of burglary. While the examination was progressing MITCHELL, the watchman, noticed one THOS. MULLINS peering into the Court-room from the door, and as he at once identified him as another member of the gang, MULLINS was arrested and arraigned with LYNCH. Both of the prisoners were then fully committed for trial at the General Sessions in default of $2,000 bail each. It was stated that a portion of this gang of burglars were at one time employed in the spice mills of the complainant.

Fire in Church-Street—Loss Twenty-five Thousand Dollars.

About 8 o'clock yesterday morning, flames were discovered on the third floor of the large five-story double building in rear of Nos. 11 and 13 Broadway, and fronting on Church-street, with the entrance on Broadway. The fire originated in some unknown way in the offices of the American Metallic Company and the American Artificial Ice Company, situated on that floor, and spread with such rapidity that the entire rear building, with a portion of the front one, was seriously damaged. The second, fourth and fifth floors of the building were unoccupied. The loss sustained on the building owned by the Adams Express Company is estimated at $20,000, fully insured in City companies. The furniture and fixtures of the offices of the two Companies already alluded to were entirely destroyed, causing a loss of $2,000 to each. The first floor was occupied by E. J. HAWKS, dealer in Government securities, who sustained considerable loss by water. The force of the runs was a stirring one, so completely had the work of destruction been completed. Scarcely any loss was sustained by the tenants in the front building, except the breaking of a few articles in each office, and the disruption of the fixtures by the unremitting patrol. The main office of Adams Express Company escaped damage except in the rear, where a portion of the building was scarred by the flames.

Death of a Child from Hydrophobia.

LEWIS E. BRAMETT, aged three years, died, on Saturday night, at No. 154 Wooster-street, with decided symptoms of hydrophobia. It appears that the child was playing with a setter dog, on the 19th of August, in the yard of No. 154 Wooster-street, when the animal bit him on the arm. The wound caused only slight pain, and no apprehension were felt by his parents, who got the matter very little attention, as the injury healed in a few days. On Tuesday last Lewis was suddenly seized with illness, and rapidly grew worse, and manifested hydrophobic symptoms. Medical attendance was called, but the physicians found it beyond their power to relieve the child in the presence of the terrible disease, and the patient lingered until a late hour on Saturday, when death occurred. The Police state that the child had been before reported as suffering from hydrophobia, but it is denied by the relatives, who aver that the disease only manifested itself some days before death. Coroner ROLLINS will hold the inquest.

The Adirondack Region—Ascent of Mount Seward.

From the Albany Argus, Nov. 18.

The recent explorations of VERPLANCK COLVIN in the Adirondack wilderness, have developed some valuable scientific facts. The principal result was the ascent of Mount Seward, which seems never to have been ascended and measured, the guides, together with the celebrated Indian, MITCHELL SABATTIS, affirming to that effect, and no record appearing of any visit or measurement. The mountain is difficult to reach, lying in a peculiarly rugged piece of the forest known to the Indians as "the Dismal Wilderness." He climbed the mountain from the Preston Ponds, on Cold River, and after severe exertions, the bewildering and distressing of many lofty summits, succeeded in reaching the peak of the mountain. The ascent occupied a little over two days. Snow-birds and the hardy winter wrens were found in small quantities upon the summit; he is disposed to consider this an exception rather than a rule. On the night of the 14th of October, he camped near the summit, and from thence saw the aurora; the wind during the display was strong and very cold, and he attributes a change in it there would seem to be a corresponding motion of the aurora. The temperature was very low during this night. The next morning the highest point was reached with great labor, by clopping through and finally walking on top of dwarf balsam fir trees. The barometrical observations established a height of 4,300 feet above the level of the sea; much less than Prof. EMMONS estimated (5,100) which was little more than a guess, as he never ascended the mountain. Mr. COLVIN entered the wilderness at the east from the Hudson River, and on his return penetrated westward to Lewis County, returning to Albany by way of Utica, pleasing from south to north and then from east to west through the wilderness during this survey. His instrument was a mercurial cistern barometer of the best construction; the station for corrections was the Dudley Observatory. He spoke highly of his guide, ALVAH DUNNING, of Raquette Lake, commending his energy and skill.

This was a short paper read before the Albany Institute; a formal report of this expedition is to be made to the State authorities, through the Regents of the University, and to it we refer those interested.

MONDAY, Nov. 21—10 A. M.

The business of the week past was unusually active in the sales for export and the clearances of Domestic Produce, the staples of Breadstuffs and Provisions participating largely with Cotton. The value of the week's clearances from New-York was nearly six millions of dollars. The direct exports of Cotton from the Southern ports were of the value of nearly six-millions additional. The whole amount of Cotton shipped to foreign markets was 97,605 bales, against 122,183 bales received at the ports. The receipts of the season are now 90,000 bales, and the exports 65,000 bales ahead of last year, and the additional planting last Spring and the very fine picking weather of October and November, give promise of a crop of nearly four million of bales, the largest since the War of 1860-61. The Import Trade continues good for the advanced Fall season and is ahead of last year for November about 7½ ₱ cent. The Customs at all the ports, as heretofore estimated, for October will prove full $16,000,000; November, $14,000,000, and, probably, for December, $12,000,000. These figures, added to the heavy receipts of July, August and September, $57,720,473, will give about one hundred millions in gold for the first half of the new Fiscal Year 1870-71. With the present favorable prospects of Trade, the other half of the year will yield $90,000,000 as against $100,631,305 from Jan. 1 to June 30 the late Fiscal Year, notwithstanding the liberal reduction on the Sugar, Tea, and Coffee Duties after Jan. 1. Such large Revenues in Gold and the application of the surplus to the reduction of the Public Debt should soon enable the Administration to bring the Annual Gold Interest charge upon the Funded Stocks of the United States by the extinguishment of $300,000,000 of the Principal of these Stocks and the reduction of the Interest on the remainder, by refunding the 5-20s at lower rates, within $100,000,000 per annum, in place of $124,304,879, as President GRANT found this charge when he came into office. Thus far the extinguishment of the Principal, including the whole of the 5 ₱ cents of 1871 for which the Gold has been appropriated at the New-York Treasury Office, is about $165,000,000, and the reduction of the annual Gold Interest charge $9,650,740 since March 4, 1869. Within the same period the Circulation and other current obligations of the Treasury have been reduced in like proportion—say to the extent of $30,000,000—and nearly the whole of this part of the debt relieved of all charge of Interest, thus effecting another saving to the Treasury of about a million of dollars ₱ annum. The further and more rapid (than at present) application of the surplus Gold from Customs to the purchase and cancellation of 5-20s, and the successful refunding of $200,000,000 more into 5 ₱ cents, and $300,000,000 into 4½ ₱ cents, would, in the next few months, secure the desired relief to the Yearly Gold Interest charge, to $100,000,000—the effect of such purchases, by bringing up the 6 ₱ cents 5-20s to the par of Gold, contributing directly to the exchanges for the new 5 ₱ cents and 4½ ₱ cents as authorized by the Act of Congress of last July. And it is difficult to discover to what other practical use this surplus Gold can be applied, while the effect upon the trade and material enterprises of the country, and indirectly upon the revenues of the Government, by unlocking capital now practically held useless in the Treasury, would be incalculable.

It is probable that the Republican Press which is outspoken on the subject is not wholly in accord with the present views of the Secretary of the Treasury, and it is also not unlikely that the President and the Secretary may differ about saving five or six millions a year interest on the Gold so long unemployed, but one thing may be assumed as certain—that Congress will not authorize its application to the withdrawal of the Greenback Circulation of the Treasury, to the extent of a single dollar, or the arbitrary resumption of Specie payments at any early day, for the sufficient reason that if Gold and Greenbacks are not practically brought together, as they have been approaching each other ever since the sinking of the Public Debt was initiated by the Administration, by turning the Gold into 5-20s, and stopping the Interest on the latter, as forced policy or mere experiment to bring about "Specie Payments" could be made, even moderately, successful short of the direst mischiefs to the trade and banking interests of the country.

The Wall-street markets during the week were excited, especially in the Gold Room, by a threatened war between England and Russia. The price of Gold, under purchases nearly or quite as heavy as in July, on the Franco-Prussian outbreak, advanced, in the main, one ₱ cent, as against 8@10 ₱ cent in a week on the occasion referred to. The Public Funds have fallen only ¼ ₱ cent. since Saturday week. The General Stock market ¼@1 ₱ cent. Foreign Bills were moved but slightly by the new War threatenings, and Money ruled as cheap and easy as before. At the hour of writing this review, the London and St. Petersburg telegrams denote a less serious phase of the pending question, and but for the fatal turn of events last Summer, when it was supposed France ought to have been satisfied with the explanations of Prussia, the public here would regard War from the present difficulty out of the question. But with a precedent so fresh before us, it may be the part of wisdom, and certainly of prudence, to jump to no hasty conclusions on the subject. A few days of caution may not be thrown away.

The weekly averages of the Associated Local and National Banks in the Clearing-house of this City, for the week ending Saturday last, Nov. 19, compare as follows with the previous week, and with the corresponding week last year, to which we add the Specie and Currency balances in the New-York offices of the United States Treasury, at these dates, respectively:

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

A London dispatch says, according to the treaty of 1856 an overt act is necessary before the treaty can be regarded as broken. Prussia, it is said, in case of a revision of the treaty, will consent to no restriction on the free action of the Czar. The substance of the reply of the Russian Government to Lord GRANVILLE, is received by cable. It adopts a conciliatory tone, but remains firm in the position originally adopted. She denies that the movements of the Principalities in contravention to the treaty of Paris inured to her advantage; declares that a Congress is impracticable in the present state of the principal European Powers; disdains any hostile intentions or desire to disregard any of the provisions of the treaty of Paris but those which are generally admitted to be unjust and oppressive against her; and repeats her intention to act upon the previous notification in regard to the Black Sea. The feeling in England, on Saturday, was more peaceful than on Friday. Queen VICTORIA, through the Prince of Wales, it is said, has expressed to the Cabinet her disapproval of Earl GRANVILLE's reply to Russia; and JOHN STUART MILL and Mr. FROUDE have written letters to the Times in behalf of peace. The feeling in Vienna, expressed through the journals, is Anti-Russian; but from Florence it is reported that the Italian Government will on no account join in the diplomatic move against Russia. Prussia, it is announced, will consent to a Congress of the Great Powers, only on condition that her relations with France shall not be discussed thereat.

THE WAR.

From Tours it is stated that the Duke of MECKLENBURG and Gen. VON DER TANN are falling back, while the French are advancing, and threaten to outflank both. The same dispatch says it is thought Gen. MANTAUFFEL will march to the Loire. Prussian scouts had reached Montargis on the 17th. The French loss at Chateaudun was 500, including prisoners. According to a Rouen dispatch, a German attack on Evreux, about forty miles south of Rouen, was repulsed. There has been a good deal of activity in the operations in the North, but no decisive engagement has been fought. The bombardment of Montmédy is now confined to the fortress by the Prussians. On Wednesday last a sortie was made from the besieged place by two companies of the Garde Mobile, and every one was either killed or taken prisoners. According to a London telegram Mr. GLADSTONE's "imprudence in writing to the London Times on the situation, over the signature of 'Scrutator,'" is much commented on. A communication in reply has been written by MAX MULLER. BISMARCK is said to be "extremely vindictive" toward Mr. GLADSTONE for his comments on the Prussian policy. It is reported in London from Tours that England has renewed her proposal for an armistice, based on a pecuniary war compensation, the rasing of the frontier fortresses, and the neutralization of Alsace and Lorraine, the Great Powers guaranteeing the fulfillment of these conditions by any future French Government. It is further understood that the Provisional Government opposes this.....Rumors are again current in London of an early concentrated attack of the French upon the Prussians before Paris. Today or to-morrow is the time now set for this grand movement. According to a Paris balloon letter 40,000 half-starved Parisians are to be soon driven from the city, by order of Gen. TROCHU, as food can no longer be provided for them.

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

A committee, appointed by the Spanish Cortes, has set out for Florence to tender the Crown of Spain to the Duke of AOSTA. The Cortes have adjourned to await the return of the committee.....Mr. WHEELER, the South African diamond hunter, has arrived in London with a stone weighing eighty-eight carats, and valued at $30,000.....The address to the Crown was adopted in the Lower House of the Austrian Reichsrath yesterday by a vote of 92 to 61.

GENERAL.

Vice-President COLFAX and family have returned to their residence in Washington. They contemplate making a visit to New-York during the present week.

The reports that a dispatch has been sent to our Legation in London relating to the Alabama claims, and that a secret understanding exists between this country and Russia, are both officially denied.

The United States Engineers who have examined the Newport and Cincinnati Bridge have prepared an adverse report.

The Committee who have visited the Louisville Canal are of opinion it will be ready for opening by Dec. 15, and will admit of the passage of boats eighty feet wide.

Gen. CHIPMAN will not be a candidate for the Clerkship of the House of Representatives during the coming session of Congress. He prefers private life.

DAVID DYER'S woolen-mill at Malden, Mass., was burned on Saturday night. The loss is estimated at $40,000.

Some of the women of Missouri are investigating Gov. BROWN'S views on the female suffrage question, with a view to securing favorable mention in his first message.

There were four inches of snow in Western Pennsylvania on Saturday.

The Helena, Big Horn and Cheyenne Railroad and Telegraph Company have been organized at Helena, Montana, and will commence operations at once. Gov. B. F. POTTS is the President.

The Congressional election in the Fifth District of Maryland is to be contested. Mr. GARY, the defeated Republican candidate, is the contestant.

During the late hurricane in the West Indies, several vessels were wrecked on the Salt Bank, Bahamas, of which the crews and cargoes were totally lost, no one surviving to tell the tale of disaster.

A fire occurred in FELGNER'S tobacco factory on South Charles-street, Baltimore, yesterday. The entire loss to that and adjoining buildings was upward of $70,000, and one man was killed and two injured.

The population of Kansas is 354,878; the value of farm and farm property $93,000,000, that of live stock $25,000,000. Last year 34,000,000 bushels of grain were raised in the State.

BARRETT SCALES, a colored Baptist preacher, was murdered near Topeka, Kan., on Thursday last. His wife and a colored man, named WARD, were arrested on suspicion.

Señor ROSSINI, the Spanish Minister, is to be married, at St. Stephen's Church, in this City, on the evening of the 29th inst., to Miss FERRY.

JOSEPH GALLEO and NELSON P. STANDSTEDT have been indicted for murder, at Boston, the former for killing LOUIS GALLEDER, the latter for killing his own wife.

No change in the New-York Collectorship is in contemplation at Washington.

Hoffman as President.

Some time ago the World published a letter from a Democrat in Illinois, pointing out that the party in the West could not possibly go on much longer under the load of infamy which the Government of New-York imposed upon it. The writer warned Democrats here that the feeling in the West was becoming more adverse to them every day, and that if Tammany persisted in its unscrupulous courses, the result would be the continued exclusion of the party from power. At that period the World attached great importance to these views, and positively assured its own friends and the public that, unless the clique which now represents Tammany could be overthrown, there would be an end of the Democratic Party. Since then it has been to a Revival meeting and undergone conversion through the ministrations of TWEED & Co.; but it cannot so easily change the facts. Its testimony last Spring was either true or false; if true, it is deceiving us now; if false, it does not deserve to be believed for deceiving us before. Western Democrats by this time begin to understand the aberrations of the World, and are only confirmed in their belief that the advocates of Tammany are as corrupt as TWEED and SWEENY themselves.

But this gang undoubtedly intend to carry the next Presidential election if they can, and already they are arranging their plans for the operation. If they can only get possession of the General Government, with their willing tool, HOFFMAN, at their head, there is no result of Republican rule during the last few years which they will not try to reverse. Some people say that President GRANT has committed many mistakes. Suppose that he has. What are his mistakes, after all said and done, in comparison with the disasters which would be inseparable from Democratic rule? We have, at least, had a well-defined policy in relation to the suppression of rebellion, the equal rights of all citizens, the payment of the debt, and all the great questions upon which our safety as a people, and our national honor, largely depend. Now, President GRANT is not likely to attempt to undo any of the work accomplished by the war. We shall not only have no security of that kind if Mr. HOFFMAN is placed in the Presidential Chair, but we shall have the strongest reason for believing that he will do his best to unsettle the whole country, and to throw us back where we stood in the Spring of 1865—not to say the Spring of 1861. Those who talk of corruption under a Republican rule, had better look into the facts connected with the Democratic Government of this City and State, and remember that it is to be the model of our National Administration if HOFFMAN is elected President in 1872. The very men who have made HOFFMAN Governor are scheming to make him President, and for the very same purposes—namely, to gain facilities for amassing fortunes and practicing corruption on a scale never before seen in the world. Tammany will never be other than what we see it now, until the organization is controlled by very different men from TWEED and SWEENY. We might just as well have JAMES FISK, Jr., elected President as Mr. HOFFMAN. Both are perfect types of the New-York Democracy of today. Either would suit the purposes of TWEED and SWEENY. To be sure Mr. FISK is a coarse and illiterate man, but so is TWEED. He has gained money by very shameful methods, but so, according to the World, has SWEENY. In the words of the homely saying, this is a case in which the "pot cannot call the kettle black." The higher class of Democrats in New-York are totally without power or influence—they are trodden down or pushed aside, while the rascals go blustering along in the middle of the street, with music playing and banners flying. We wish we could get Mr. SAMUEL TILDEN to tell us frankly whether this is the truth or not.

Republicans who go about knocking their heads together on subjects in which they take a sincere, but we must be allowed to say an exaggerated, interest, had better ask themselves plainly at once whether they think it would be better for the country at large to have HOFFMAN in the White House than Gen. GRANT. A few Free Traders seem to have made up their minds that unlimited corruption, and an unbridled saturnalia of the Tweedites, would be quite acceptable if they could only get their pet theories adopted as part of the national policy. They would pull down the entire house because one of the rooms is closed to them. If they had their own way, they would soon see cause to repent of their zeal. It is much easier to allow a Tammany rule to grow up than to break it down again. Even a Free Trader would find that he had paid too dear for his whistle if the price of it was wholesale surrender to the scum of the Democratic Party. This is not a question, be it ever remembered, of reputable Democrats coming into office. Men like Mr. TILDEN, and many others who could be named, have no chance of directing the counsels of their party at present. The Tweedites have obtained the upper hand of them as completely as they have of the Republicans. The honest Democrats have been pushed from every office—even from the Central Park Commission, which is now only a department of the "Ring." In the West there is a strong feeling against the Tweed gang, but the ring-leaders have resolved to spend any amount of money to break this opposition down. They can easily raise the funds from the taxpayers between this time and 1872. We can, therefore, have no dependence on reform within the Democratic Party. There consequently seems to be no excuse whatever for any Republican who tries to disable his own party at a time like this. The President will doubtless endeavor to strengthen us here in New-York, where we very much need strengthening, and after that we must rely upon the good common sense of the bulk of the people, who can discriminate between the venal errors of an honest man and the infamous misdeeds of organized banditti—which is the only title the Democrats who rule New-York can claim as their own.

The Cry for Reorganization.

The cry for the reorganization of the Republican Party, or, as an alternative, the organization of a new party, is too feeble to be heard except during a time of extreme political quiet. The dullness of the interval between the November elections and the assembling of Congress renders the faintest threat of agitation audible. In other circumstances, the demand now urged here and there in the West would attract no attention whatever.

The Chicago cry is too weak and too hollow to awaken an echo. Revenue reform and civil service reform are both well in their way; but when an attempt is made to convert them into the starting points of a new party movement, we know that they are but pretexts employed to conceal a general hostility to the policy and leaders of the Republican organization. Important as these questions are in their place, they are so entirely destitute of the primary conditions of popular strength that no man of common political sagacity can be supposed to consider them the foundation of a distinct party movement. If he desires to use them as against the Republican Party, it is with some unavowed ulterior purpose, from which only the Democracy can derive profit.

New parties, indeed, are not manufactured to order. There is not much difficulty in getting up minor movements. The formation of a clique is the work of a day. But a new national party requires time for its development, and is the product of visible and wide-spread dissatisfaction with one or more of existing organizations. The few candidates who have contested regular nominations, with free trade as their main reliance, were defeated. The Republican Party not only proved its strength, but exacted from the opposition the homage implied in the indorsement of Republican measures and opinions. A party which thus demonstrates the continued allegiance of its members is not likely to yield much comfort to the reorganizers.

The absence of any desire among Republicans for changes affecting the unity of their organization, is not more conspicuous than the absence of men of mark from the councils of the disaffected. Not a single constituency has pronounced in favor of the movement which Republicans are asked to join. Not a single Republican leader of note has espoused an agitation which can prosper only at the expense of his party. Senator TRUMBULL has been named, but without a particle of authority. His recent campaign speeches have shown that he is not friendly to the retention of customs' duties framed to enrich special interests, and that he is an advocate of a revision of taxation in the interest of the revenue,—but he is as ardent a Republican as ever. He relies upon the Republican Party to accomplish all needed reforms, and will work through agencies that afford no succor to the Democracy. Senator SCHURZ is in the same position. A zealous revenue reformer, he is nevertheless a steadfast Republican. And so it is with all others who have been mentioned. We have yet to witness the first indication of genuine dissatisfaction within the party, and the first prominent member of it who openly countenances the third-party cry.

In truth, except as an auxiliary to the Democracy, the purpose of those who have raised the cry is incomprehensible. We can understand it as an excuse for a man who wants to pass from one party to the other, and is on the look-out for a pretense; but we must be permitted to doubt either his sagacity or his sincerity as a revenue reformer. There is ground for hoping that a revision of the revenue system may be secured in the next Congress, but the realization of the hope is contingent upon the repression of a movement which places revenue reform in antagonism to the Republican organization. Compel members of Congress to choose between this measure and allegiance to their party, and they will not hesitate as to their course. They will not renounce a fellowship resting upon a broad national policy, and justified by a brilliant record, nor contribute even indirectly to the strength of the Democracy. They know that if the reform is ever to be effected, it must be through the Republican Party, and they will be content to work within the organization to that end. Their influence will, in the first instance, be visible in the restraint imposed upon the champions of an oppressive tariff, who must share with the malcontents the odium and responsibility attaching to a movement which invests revenue reform with undue importance. The monopolists being checked, the friends of an amended tariff will have free scope, and by united action as Republicans the weight of their party will in due season be exerted in behalf of reform. These legitimate methods of bringing it about, the apologists of the new movement rudely discard. They are willing to become tributary to the Democratic Party with all its abominations, though the effect would be to postpone fiscal reform indefinitely.

Judge Woodruff's Decision in the "Quinn" Case.

The World has received a letter from a correspondent, which it makes the text for an attack upon Judge WOODRUFF for his action in the case of QUINN, the repeater. The letter is as follows:

To the Editor of the World:

SIR: In the United States Court, Brooklyn, Judge NELSON, of United States Supreme Court, presiding, in February, 1868, the revenue case of Government against DEVLIN, TAPPIN and LEVAN was called for trial. After a demurrer, argued by their counsel—WILLIAM M. EVARTS and the late JAMES T. BRADY—had been overruled, Mr. TRACY, District-Attorney, moved for immediate sentence, quoting two obscure cases as precedents. Judge NELSON replied: "As well, Sir, might you ask me to sentence their counsel who advised them to demur. Admitting guilt, for argument's sake, on a demurrer to a technicality; and, Sir, I am not a technical Judge. No man shall be condemned before me without a chance for his evidence in defense to be heard."

In July, 1870, a nol. pros. was entered in the case, Mr. TRACY admitting in Court his inability to furnish evidence for conviction. What redress would the defendants have had if they had been sentenced for presuming to demur, and had been imprisoned? D.

The letter misstates the facts. The occurrence to which it refers took place in May, 1867, and no such language was used by Judge NELSON.

We republish from our paper of May 31, 1867, our report of what took place on the decision of the demurrer in that case:

"On the rendering of this decision the District-Attorney moved the Court that judgment be entered in favor of the United States against the defendants on the demurrer, and that the Court proceed to sentence them on the first and second counts of the indictment, which were based on the forty-third section of the act of 1866, the offense under which was only a misdemeanor, for where a defendant demurs to an indictment for a misdemeanor, or if it is decided against him, he is not allowed to plead over, but judgment absolute is rendered against him.

Mr. EVARTS said if that was the law, it was the defendants' counsel who ought to go to prison rather than the defendants.

The District-Attorney said that such certainly was the law settled by the Court of Errors in this State in the case of The People vs. TAYLOR, in 3 Denio, and by the Courts of Connecticut in a case which he cited from the Connecticut reports.

Judge NELSON said that he would not hold the defendants to any technical rule in the matter. The questions might just as well have been raised by a motion to quash as by a demurrer, and he thought on the whole the defendants better be allowed to plead."

The difference between this case and QUINN'S case is plain. In DEVLIN'S case the defendant's counsel were obviously taken by surprise at the position into which their clients had been brought. No such surprise existed in the Quinn case. Mr. STOUGHTON, one of QUINN'S counsel, was associated with the District-Attorney as counsel for the Government for the trial of the Devlin case, and it cannot be supposed that he failed to acquaint himself with the previous history of the case. The rule that judgment followed the overruling of a demurrer in such cases, therefore, should have been perfectly familiar to him. And, moreover, before the demurrer was interposed, QUINN'S counsel were distinctly and openly notified by the District-Attorney of the existence of the rule, and that he should move the Court to apply it in case a demurrer was interposed and overruled. There is not the slightest reason to doubt that, if any such notice had been given in the Devlin case, Judge NELSON would have made the same ruling as Judge WOODRUFF did in QUINN'S case.

The World's talk about Judge WOODRUFF'S "depriving a prisoner of that precious birthright, a jury trial," is sheer nonsense. A jury trial is for the purpose of settling questions of fact. But here there was no issue of facts raised. The conviction which established the fact that QUINN had no right to register himself as a voter, was set out in the indictment against him, as was the fact that he had registered himself as a voter three times. Not only had he admitted by his demurrer that these were the facts, but when the District-Attorney, in moving for the judgment against him, stated that he had the record of that conviction in his possession, there was not an intimation from any one of QUINN'S counsel that a doubt existed about his having been so convicted, or having so registered himself. If there had been any statement by counsel that a question of fact was raised in the case, the probabilities are that the result would have been different. If there was any such question in the case, it is the fault of the counsel and not of the Court that it was not presented.

In the absence of such an issue, a jury trial would have been a mere sham—and the Judge was no more called upon to have QUINN'S case presented to a jury in the aspect in which it then stood, than to have sent MCLAUGHLIN'S case to a jury after he had pleaded guilty.

As to the further proceedings in DEVLIN'S case, the correspondent omits an important part of them. After the defendants had pleaded, in pursuance of the leave given them, the case was called for trial in January, 1868, when two witnesses for the Government, MCAMBLE and OSBORNE, one or both of whom had been in attendance in the Court-room that morning, were found to have disappeared. All the efforts of the Government to discover them were unavailing, and it is understood that they fled the country, having been well paid for so doing by the defendants in the case. The nolle prosequi which was afterward entered was not in consequence of any innocence of the defendants, but because, by the delay which they obtained, they were enabled to get rid of evidence against them.

If the technical rule had been followed justice would have been obtained in that case, as it was in QUINN'S case.

The World, however, like all those concerned in election frauds, is in the position of the man who, being brought up before the Court, was told that he "should have justice," and complained that that was just what he was afraid of, and would not have at any price.

Education for All.

The enormous power and well-directed energy developed by the Prussian people during the present war have called attention anew to what is known to be the secret and source of their strength—thorough popular education. The Prussians are undoubtedly the best educated people in Europe. And they are so, as is well known, because with them ignorance is looked upon as the greatest enemy of the State, and education is compulsory. Every child is forced by law to attend school. At the foundation of the Prussian Kingdom, there is not, as there was at the basis of the French Empire, a vast, ignorant, proletaire class. The common citizen and private soldier is a man of school education, however limited. The State really rests on a basis of intelligence. What an immense benefit this has been to Germany in the recent struggle, the issue has shown. It will be a still greater benefit when political troubles begin to shake the Kingdom of the HOHENZOLLERNS. Even England has not such a safeguard against revolution of a socialistic kind as the Prussian Monarchy will have. Another European State, the Republic of Switzerland, has, in some of its cantons, tried the same grand experiment of compulsory education, and the world knows with what eminent success. Great Britain is already approaching it, and one of the leading principles of the Liberal Party will evidently be, "Education for all, by law if necessary." Under an extended popular suffrage, this compulsion will be much easier than it would have been under the government by class—for a democracy, when in earnest, is always the strongest and most despotic of all forms of administration. France will undoubtedly hold forth this as one of the reforms which this terrible war has taught her as necessary, and the "Prussian system" is already spoken of by reformers in Italy as among the improvements which must be adopted there.

As Mr. MUNDELLA remarked the other evening to our working men, the want of compulsion is the only defect of our American educational system. In Puritan New-England, where a man who did not educate his children was once looked upon as a social outlaw, compulsion was not originally needed. But times have changed. Great numbers of ignorant strangers have settled in the manufacturing towns and villages, and in their greed for money, they put their children to work in very tender years, and crowds of youth are growing up in New-England almost utterly destitute of school education.

Large cities like New-York and Brooklyn are cursed with an immense ignorant population who prey upon property and person, and are merely unschooled children grown up. Thousands of youth in this City never enter a school door. Others attend a short time, and then are placed in factories, or are forced to follow street occupations, or rove about the docks and markets, becoming thieves and vagrants. The foundation of New-York rests on a vast "dangerous class," which is very threatening to the future good order and prosperity of the City. It is doubtful even if republican government itself can ever endure here, or be anything but a sham, while the basis is of such corrupt and unsafe material. All honor to the earnest efforts of many of our citizens to breast these evils through such agencies as the "Industrial Schools," "Lodging-houses" and "Free Reading-rooms," designed to instruct and elevate this lowest class. But we need broader measures, originating from the State itself. There should be an act of Legislature compelling every child under, say, twelve years of age, to attend some school each day at least three hours, whether the school be public, or ecclesiastical, or charitable. Such a law would stop the growth of an ignorant and dangerous class, already beginning in our villages. It would, if enforced, go far to redeem New-York from the tide of ignorance and juvenile crime which is pouring through it. Our present Truant law is of little avail. What we should try to influence is not the truant class, but the vagrant class.

Whether we can ever expect our present City Judiciary in the lower Courts, or the City officials, to aid in executing such a law, is a question we are not able to answer. They thrive too much on ignorance, and an unschooled constituency is sure never to inquire too closely into the connection between rents and jobs. Still the effort would be worth making by those who are in earnest to reform City affairs, and many of the more intelligent Democrats will support it.

A very simple method could be devised for its execution in this City, which would not have the appearance of hardship, and therefore would be more likely to be accepted by both Police and Judges. It is the adoption of regulations by the Common Council similar to the so-called "Boston Ordinances." By those every child beneath a certain tender age—say thirteen—if found on the street engaged in peddling, or boot-blacking, or any street business, must, at the demand of the Police, produce a license, and this license is only given on the child's bringing a certificate from some teacher that he has been attending school for the past three months at least three hours a day. This license must be renewed at every short period. If the child has no license or no occupation, he is brought before the Court and is sent for a short period to some reformatory; here it might be to the Catholic Protectory, or to Hart's Island, or the Juvenile Asylum. Such an order of the Common Council, or such an act of the Legislature, not being too severe, would be likely to be executed by the Police and carried out by the Police Judges. Whatever be the form of the act, we hope form law either from the State Government or the Central Government, enforcing education in every State and Territory of the Union. It is as much needed at the South as the North. It would be an unmingled blessing everywhere.

The Story of Pillone, a Brigand, and Black Miles, a Thief.

An interesting incident occurred the other day in the Court of General Sessions. Judge BEDFORD sentenced for a long term in the State Prison, WILLIAM BROOKS, a celebrated pickpocket. The distinguished "operator" returns to quarters with which he is already familiar, although for a long period he has managed to keep out of them. It appears that when arraigned before Justice DOWLING, last Friday, that Magistrate, who is gifted with a memory very fatal to thieves, instantly recognized him, although eight years had passed since they were last face to face. During these years, BROOKS has not been idle. The Magistrate who condemned him bore witness to his industry in the following pithy manner: "Since you last left State Prison, I daresay you have picked a thousand pockets. You have, however, picked one too many. Owing to your professional skill, you have thus far escaped justice. Today the law will lay its iron grasp upon you, and will hold you for the next five years within the walls of the State Prison."

We may see from this that our petty thieves are, sooner or later, pretty sure to get their deserts. Only the great once escape. The man who steals a pocket-book in an omnibus goes to the State Prison. The man who steals a million of the people's money by more circuitous processes rolls in his carriage, and puts his horses in "palatial stables." Sometimes, however, great thieves come to grief; and although not so many instances occur as could be wished, such examples are not without a certain kind of consolation. Two noted robbers have lately thus been checked in their career in Europe. One was the noted Italian brigand, PILLONE. This bold rascal was a sort of modern Masaroni. At first a stone-cutter, he afterward became a soldier, and then turned highwayman. For years he has been the terror of the country surrounding Vesuvius. His immense energy and acuteness gave him command of all the brigands in that neighborhood; and his remarkable skill almost always enabled him to evade the troops and the Police. He was frequently in Florence and in Rome, and at different times had detained as prisoners many people of high rank. It is said that FRANCIS II. once bestowed on him a decoration—for what service is not quite clear. He committed twelve homicides with his own hand, and was three times condemned to death. Strange to say, he was not only proverbially generous, but notoriously pious—for a long time having enjoyed the soubriquet of Cavaliere San Antonio, which is certainly more creditable than were the reputation and name of Fra Diavolo. He accumulated immense treasures, and was famous over all Italy.

But like other successful scoundrels, PILLONE was destined to come to a disastrous end. One PETRILLO, an artistic detective of the first water, was put on the brigand's track. This man, who is represented as a genius in his way, devoted his whole soul to PILLONE'S capture. He waylaid him at last just as the robber chieftain is ambushed in the well-known opera. The spot was near Naples, and a terrible fight took place between PILLONE and PETRILLO, aided by several followers. Although the detective was of herculean strength, he was no match for the brigand chief, who, in single combat, would have come off victorious. Numbers, however, prevailed, and PILLONE at last bit the dust. So great was the excitement caused by his death that thousands flocked from all quarters to see the body. It is a curious fact that on the person of this robber were found many proofs of his earnest piety. They consisted of prayers and verses, in PILLONE'S handwriting, addressed to the Deity and to the saints. There were likewise images of the Savior, the Virgin, and "Bambino," and a Host, whether consecrated or not, red with blood or wine, and carefully worn next his breast. The account before us declares that the Host was perforated in the middle by the dagger-thrust which proved the brigand's death-stroke.

The other eminent thief we refer to is WILLIAM SIMPSON, known as "Black Miles." His arrest, which has just taken place, is considered the most important made by the London Police for years past. Black Miles is a Yorkshireman, and has been a well-known "fence," or receiver of stolen goods, for thirty years. In 1864 he was connected with extensive robberies, including that of the Stamp Office at Huddersfield, but the crime could not be brought home to him. Both before and since, he rapidly gathered money, and is said now to possess a large fortune. He is reported to have been associated with "first-class" thieves all over the world, and to have been in the habit of advancing money to them to go to foreign countries to transact business. Through a long train of ingenious artifice, "Black Miles" has at last been caught by two adroit detectives, Messrs. RANGER and HAM. Among other documents, some have been found connecting the prisoner with robberies in distant countries, including the United States. His course of prosperous iniquity is now ended, and although life is gone, left to him, he will doubtless expiate by permanent imprisonment the long list of his crimes.

Perhaps the fate of these distinguished thieves may be a warning to their brethren elsewhere. PILLONE and "Black Miles" had things their own way for a long time. They reveled in all that wealth could buy, waxed fat on public plunder, enjoyed extended fame, and thought themselves, for years, beyond the reach of retributive justice. Yet, although enriched with gold and enlivened by pleasure for a while, the way of the transgressor, as PILLONE and "Black Miles" have found, is certain to be hard in the end. We commend this simple moral of a true tale to all who are growing rich on plunder.

The City Republicans.

The Tammany Republicans in this City, not content with the betrayal of the Republican Party, insist upon displaying Republican colors and parading as guardians of the party they helped to defeat. Thus, while the honest men in certain districts are busily engaged in purging their ranks of the hypocrites and knaves who are notoriously tools of TWEED & Co., in other districts the "wolves in sheep's clothing," having control of the machinery of the organization, are equally diligent in punishing all who are avowedly hostile to the Ring. Sharp lines are being drawn in every Assembly district, and the majority in each association are bent upon the expulsion of the minority. We can scarcely wonder, then, that the reporters, in chronicling the action of the various associations, sometimes confound foes with friends. In the Tenth and Twenty-first Districts, for example, the associations are in the hands of mere creatures of Tammany; yet in these instances, under the pretense of protecting Republican principles, the handful of good men who voted for WOODFORD and LEZWITH have been summarily expelled. Their crime was not so much the voting for these candidates, as their voting contrary to the plan laid down in the Tammany interest. In one of these associations, every so-called Republican who participated in the action expelling genuine Republicans, is the incumbent of an office under Tammany Hall.

We cannot too emphatically direct the attention of our rural friends to the fact that the Republican machine in this City, known as the "General Committee," is completely controlled by the subordinates of the Police, Fire, and Tax Commissions. That is to say, the Committee to whom the party looks for direction is managed by men who do the bidding of the corrupt section of the Democracy. Steps are now being taken, cautiously and prudently, but firmly and decidedly, by trustworthy members of the party, to effect its reorganization on a basis that shall exclude the hired agents of Tammany from all share in the Republican councils. The work is a delicate one, and cannot be performed without exciting considerable feeling. But it is essential to the integrity of the party, and to the strength of its position in future contests.

MINOR TOPICS.

All sorts of stories are coming to us through the cable in reference to the difficulty between Russia and England. One account says that the Prince of WALES has given the Cabinet to understand that the Queen, his mother, very strongly disapproves of Lord GRANVILLE'S dispatch. If the Prince had done anything of the kind, the Ministers would have been pretty certain to have sent him away with what is commonly called "a flea in his ear." The Queen would choose an intelligent medium through which to convey her opinions, if she wanted any medium at all. The story that BISMARCK is angry with Mr. GLADSTONE because he writes letters to the Times under the signature of "Scrutator" is another piece of gossip. Mr. GLADSTONE seems to have a scribbling fit upon him, but he has probably not yet adopted the signature which for years was used by a well-known writer.

Public opinion in England seems to be adverse to a war with Russia, so far as we can get at the truth. It seems, at present, very improbable that the people will once more plunge into a contest to keep the possessions of the Sultan intact. India is in no danger from Russia—she cannot be attacked from the sea while England has a fleet, and by land there are insuperable difficulties in the way of invasion. The nearest base for any movement on the part of Russia would be two thousand miles from Cabul, the country intervening being full of unsettled tribes, by no means too friendly to Russia. There is no motive for this war on the part of England, and nothing but madness in her rulers can lead her into it.

There may have been some indiscreet speculation in real estate transactions in this City during the last four years, but no observant man can doubt that the rise in value which has occurred bears a reasonable relation to the capacity of the island, and to the advance in prices which has taken place in almost all parts of the country. A very simple calculation will show that at its present ratio of growth the City will, in a comparatively brief period, extend over all accessible portions of the island. That period will be longer or shorter, according to the measures that may be taken to facilitate up-town travel. But the unoccupied area being relatively small, its prospective value is certain and great. It would be greater but for the taxation resulting from Tammany's misrule, and the excessive and fraudulent assessments which are its characteristics. The rapid extension of the trading district—the march of store-keepers, wholesale merchants, and bankers higher and higher—is another reason why values should not undergo any permanent decline.

We learn from the Albany Times that Hon. JAS. W. HUSTED, member elect from Westchester County, intends to renew his bill introduced into the Assembly last Winter, for the sale of Sing Sing Prison. Sing Sing is getting to be a suburb of New-York, and its inhabitants assert that real estate would improve, and the village would grow much faster than it does, were it not for the odium that attaches to the place as being the abode of convicts. Even the fact of its being the birth-place of Gov. HOFFMAN, fails to redeem it in the eyes of fashionable people, and it is said that the Governor himself is getting ashamed of his native town, and is afraid it will injure his chances for the Presidency. Sama of the Governor's leading supporters are also very nervous and uncomfortable whenever Sing Sing is mentioned. Mr. HOFFMAN will doubtless favor the project for a sale of the prison; but in order to make the thing sure, we would advise the people of Sing Sing to give a few acres of land in the village to "Boss" TWEED and his "Ring" associates in this City. HUNTER's bill would then pass the Legislature without any difficulty.

The newspapers in Virginia are trying to explain away the dissatisfaction expressed by some Northern farmers, who recently removed into the State, and now complain that its agricultural resources do not equal their expectations. The Richmond Whig insists that the disappointment is the result of mismanagement—that Northern settlers commit the blunder of investing too large a proportion of their means in land, leaving too little in their pockets for its profitable cultivation. The answer is no doubt borne out by facts. The tendency of new settlers almost everywhere is to fall into the same mistake. When, however, the Richmond journalist proceeds to point out the necessity for a liberal expenditure upon bone dust, and other means of restoring an exhausted soil, he unwittingly reveals a drawback from which the whole South suffers in comparison with the West. Ultimately, no doubt, the advantages of the South will be appreciated; but meanwhile farmers with limited capital, or with limited skill, or with a not unnatural aversion to superfluous trouble, are very likely to prefer the virgin soil of the prairie States, whose productiveness is not less seductive than the ease with which it is tilled.

There seems to be no doubt that a true case of hydrophobia has occurred in this City. A little child, three years old, was playing with a setter dog in the middle of August last, when the animal bit him. Nothing was thought of the occurrence at the time, but last Tuesday the child was seized with hydrophobia, and died in great anguish. These cases are so rare that nine medical men out of ten have never seen one—nevertheless, it is a good rule to keep dogs out of the way of children, even when the disposition of the animal is well known to the owner. It is very lucky for children that hydrophobia does not always follow the bite of a dog.

The assertions that the success of GRATZ BROWN in Missouri implies the transfer of that State to the Democracy, is combated by the St. Louis Democrat, which adduces figures to prove that the Republicans have a clear majority of fourteen thousand over their opponents, including the newly enfranchised Ex-Slaves. This majority is being continually augmented by additions to the population from other States, and by the naturalization of foreign immigrants, mostly of German birth. All that is essential to Republican ascendency, in a State so situated, is the unity of the party; and that will be easily restored if local leaders forget personal grievances, and if those in authority employ their opportunities to obliterate all traces of the dissensions produced by the recent contest. The object to be gained is worth an effort.

The report of the Commissioners appointed by Judge CARDOZO to widen Broadway, from Thirty-fourth to Fifty-ninth-street, is said to be completed, and will be presented for confirmation today. This is only one of a dozen similar "jobs" concocted during the last few years for the benefit of our "Ring" politicians. The opposition to this particular fraud comes from three different sources; first from those who claim that they are too heavily assessed for the "job;" second from those who claim that the damages awarded them are too small, and that partiality was shown in the awards; and third, from those who claim that the proposed improvement is unnecessary and ought to be stopped before it goes any further. The last is the true ground of opposition, and as it includes both the others, the three classes will do well to unite their forces. The Commissioners are CHAS. G. CORNELL, JAMES S. HERRESHOFF and JOEL FITHIAN. Mr. MURPHY, Collector of the Port, was originally in the commission, but finding himself powerless as against the other two Commissioners, to prevent the improvement being made a "job," he withdrew, and JOEL FITHIAN, a son-in-law of Controller CONNOLLY, was appointed in his place. To keep everything in the family is the motto of the "Ring."

Will the Tammany Ring have the hardihood to "count out" H. M. TWOMBLY, the Republican member elect from the Seventh Assembly District in this City? The Republicans of the Sixth Congressional District declare that if TWOMBLY is counted out on the flimsy pretext assigned by the Ring, Mr. "Sunset" COX will have more substantial obstacles than a mere technicality to overcome before taking a seat in the Forty-second Congress. By all means let them keep their word.

Reopening of All Souls Church.

All Souls Church, corner of Fourth-avenue and Twenty-first-street, was reopened yesterday morning, having undergone extensive repairs since last Spring, which were made necessary by the decay which had made considerable ravages in the roof, and particularly in the dome of the church. This dome always was a prominent feature of this edifice, from the magnificence of its decorations, but it is now even more gorgeous than before. Last Spring the trustees of the church became fearful lest the dome should fall, and consulted the architect, who gave it as his opinion, after careful examination, that it was secure for the present, but that it might require extensive repairs after a time. The trustees, after consideration, determined to effect the necessary alterations at once, and accordingly surrendered the church to the mechanics in June, and the result of their labors of five months is shown in the very substantial character of the repairs made. The same may now be considered secure beyond any possibility of accident, and during the interval the church has been thoroughly renovated and repainted in a somewhat different style from that which was originally given it. The interior of the edifice now looks, in every respect, like a new church, while the unfinished appearance of the outside is not very creditable to so wealthy a congregation as this. The foundation for the tower on the north-west corner of the building still remains as the builders left it when the church itself was dedicated, and no attempt has been made to build upon it that portion of the structure which the architect originally intended should adorn the whole. It will be remembered that a difference existed among the congregation respecting the location of the church, one party deeming the present site unsuitable, and the other adhering to their determination to build here. This dissension resulted in the completion of the church without the tower, there not being funds enough to pay for both, and the members wisely considered that a church without a tower was better than no church at all. The differences which then existed have not been wholly healed, and consequently this unique edifice stands today shorn of its magnificent proportions. The services yesterday were conducted by Rev. Dr. BELLOWS, and the congregation was very large, both morning and evening. In the morning, a discourse was delivered on the subject of a higher conception of religious views by the people, in the course of which the pastor took occasion to refer incidentally to the corruption which exists in the political affairs of the State, as shown in the last election, but expressed a hope that the people would not despair of effecting a reformation in the Government. He took occasion to express the most hopeful views of the future of our country, which was peaceful and prosperous, while the countries of Europe were filled with dissensions and strife.

QUESTIONS OF PROVISIONS.

The question of provisions is still the important one of the day, and the problem of distribution has not yet been solved in a satisfactory manner. The poor are still (Oct. 21) forced to form queues before the municipal stalls, receiving their quota of fresh meat only after long hours of waiting. Either the municipality should open more stalls, or return to the first system of allowing the butchers to make the distribution. In every quarter stalls are opened for the sale of horse meat, but it has not yet come into general favor. The poor will not buy it through a feeling of jealousy of the rich as much as anything. "The rich want the best, and they would put us off with horse" is the cry, and it is in vain that the papers publish stories of rich families which are reduced to the use of this meat. A stall has been opened just across the street, and so far as appearance goes, the meat is elegant, but, like thousands of others, I should have to be very hungry before eating it. I have had four days of life, when I was very glad to eat mule meat, but so long as there is bread and vegetables, I should pass the horse. It may be all imagination, but it is hard to swallow a piece of this meat without having the reproachful eyes of some faithful animal fastened upon your face. Despite the attempts to make it popular I do not think horse meat will ever be eaten except as a last resort. To overcome the repugnance of the poor it is proposed to open shops where the meat will be sold ready cooked. One cannot imagine a better looking table piece than a roast of horse, for in appearance the meat is far superior to beef. I have just returned from the Rue du Bac, where I went to see a rising emeute concerning this question of meat. One has to have, in addition to the card from the municipality, a ticket for three days. These are given out at the Mairie, and to obtain them queues must be formed at a very early hour. The abuse of this system begin to be apparent. A gentleman of my acquaintance was in the crowd this morning, in the Seventh Arrondissement, and received No. 429. Behind him was a man who knew the officials, and who gave a wink or word to his friends. He received No. 188. Before three hundred is attained the good meat is gone, and only poor scraps remain. It was thus ascertained that the officials keep two lists open, and that they give the first numbers to their friends. At the stall in the Rue du Bac the following scene occurred: The No. 250 was called by the guard, and for a moment no one responded. When it was again called a feeble voice, choked by the crowd, cried "here!" "No. 251," cried the guard immediately. The holder of the first ticket was a feeble girl of some fourteen years. Seeing the injustice a gentleman pushed the girl forward, but the guard repulsed her, despite her tears, and her assertion that she had been waiting there since early light. The girl went away, but soon returned with her brother, a Captain in the National Guard. He, too, was refused, and at once appealed to the crowd. "I went to the Mairie at 2 o'clock this morning," he said, "and I stood there, despite my service on the ramparts, all the day before, until ten minutes to 5 o'clock, to get my ticket. No. 250 was given me. My sister came here at 4 o'clock and stood in the queue from 4 to 12 o'clock—eight long hours—and she a feeble girl. I demand that her number be served." The guard again refused and made a motion with his bayonet; but the Captain seized the gun, and the women in a body fell upon the guards, struck them, drove them off and warned them not to come back. Yet when this act of justice was done the queue remained, and each pushed forward in regular order. The officer continued: "My sick mother and my sister, weak as you perceive, have had no meat for eight days. The man who keeps this municipal shop carried home a whole leg of mutton last night, and there is another hidden under the bed in this back room. I should have made no complaint had my sister been well treated; now I warn you, citizens, to watch over these men." The crowd drew the leg of mutton from under the bed, and threw it upon the counter to be distributed. The Captain came to where I was standing. "I would have called them robbers and thieves," he said calmly, "but I know how slight a word it takes to inflame a crowd. You see how quietly they listen to words of moderation and justice, even when speaking of a great outrage upon themselves." He was right. His own calmness in redressing his wrongs impressed the crowd, and there was no attempt at violence except upon the dishonest and unfeeling guards. This scene shows one of the great abuses of the day and of this municipal system of distribution. In the Eleventh Arrondissement, I am told, the lower members are only given to men of avowed Republican sentiment, and I am perfectly aware that some of my Legitimist or Orleanist friends have not been able to obtain fresh meat for ten days. One family was put off with the fat of entrails, rejected by over three hundred members. One of the follies of this system clearly pointed out has not yet been corrected. Twenty beeves and a certain number of sheep are delivered daily to the agents of each arrondissement. It thus happens that the arrondissement having 150,000 inhabitants gets no more meat than the one with 80,000. BLANQUI pointed out this injustice more than a week ago.

REDUCTION OF RATIONS.

Today (Oct. 26) the ration of fresh meat has been considerably reduced, each person receiving only about half a pound for two days. This is the ration of beef, mutton or pork only, for horse meat and asses can still be bought at will. Donkey steaks now command a very high price, and the best parts of the horse are so dear that the authorities will soon have to ration the poor with that meat. It is evident that the consumption of horse has greatly increased within a week, and one sees long trains before the stalls where horse is sold, as one formerly saw them before the other shops. This is doubtless due to the difficulty of obtaining other meat, but there is a great deal in habitude or custom. One must confess that the repugnance to horse-flesh is an idea merely, and this repugnance once conquered, one can eat horse with a relish. The donkeys seemed to serve as a stepping-stone to this end, for donkey-meat went off rapidly, and when there was none, those who had eaten it took to horse without difficulty. To-day the butchery opposite my windows has disposed of five horses and two donkeys—the heads and lungs alone remaining unsold tonight. The general use of horse-flesh will considerably prolong the siege. I was told that, at the ordinary ration, there remains beef and mutton for eight days only; but as the ration has been reduced one-half, and as one-half of the population is content to eat horse, this will give us meat for twenty-four more days.

HOPES.

That is, I believe, a few days over the time demanded by Gen. TROCHU. He hopes to be ready for an attack—that is, he hopes to have some kind of assistance from without—in about twelve or fifteen days. That he is confident of success is seen by a remark which he made this morning, to an American going out of the city. "It is not worth the trouble you take," remarked the General, "for before another month everybody can leave who wishes." And why should he not succeed? The Germans have, say three hundred thousand men, of the highest figure, before Paris. One hundred thousand must be detached to meet the enemy without (if, indeed, the official statements are true concerning that army,) and Gen. TROCHU has 250,000 able-bodied men under his command, without counting the National Guards, who can do rampart duty. At all events, the trial must be made, and no one can predict the result. At one moment I feel a ray of hope; at another, I despair of a victory over that strong, steady, victorious army without. The very sight of old VON MOLTKE's photograph, or a glance at the firm eye and compressed lips of that aged King, makes one dread the day when the final conflict must come. One looks in vain for hope in the face of TROCHU, in the sullen countenance of ROCHEFORT, or in the weak and sniveling self-complacency of JULES FAVRE. GAMBETTA has a brow which one can look upon, and an eye of fire, while the calm dignity of KERATRY's face commands respect; but I hope it will not be offensive to the French if I say that a finer group of heads than those given in the portraits of the German chiefs were never placed in Paris windows.

VEGETABLES NEEDED.

Thus far there has been no lack in necessary vegetables, although the price has been raised a little. Potatoes are still abundant, and today the very finest of cauliflowers have been offered for sale on the streets. A bunch of chicory, large enough for a comfortable salad, is still sold for five or six sous. It seems that in the strip of land covered by the fire of the forts there yet remains a large quantity of vegetables ungathered. Last week the Government sent out a few hundred boys, guarded by the soldiers, to dig potatoes, and forty cart loads were brought in. Now the Minister of the Interior issues a decree organizing a body of citizens for the purpose of gathering the vegetables in the environs of Paris. Each man thus engaged will receive one franc per diem, or seventy-five centimes, with the privilege of a certain amount of vegetables. The military is ordered to protect the men engaged in this work. This is a timely order, and it will doubtless give us a supply of fresh vegetables for many days to come.

BY PIGEON EXPRESS.

Communication with the Government at Tours has now been established with tolerable regularity, thanks to a few men who, for some years past, have had a fancy for carrier-pigeons. These birds have been bred with great care, and only a few have been tried in bringing in news of the Chantilly races. But their instincts are almost unerring. Contrary to the general supposition, the best birds are not the parents—those which have raised—but the young birds of from eight to ten months. The prize-birds—that is, those which took first prizes at the Exhibition here—are valued at 400 or 500 francs, or from $80 to $100. A gentleman who had near a hundred of these valuable pigeons was lately sent out to Tours in a balloon, carrying thirty of his pets. They are loosed with dispatches from time to time; they fly direct to the cote, and are carried back in a balloon. The dispatches brought by pigeons are now photographed, being reduced in size so that a dispatch of the length of this paragraph can be put upon a piece of Bue paper, no larger than a twenty-five cent piece in silver. With large magnifying-glasses the writing can be easily read. The paper is very carefully bound around a single feather upon the body, and care must be taken to fasten it so that the tension will not incommode the bird, or he may pause to pluck out the feather. Several birds arrived without dispatches, and, as it was clearly due to the want of experience in fastening the paper, the owner of the pigeons was sent out to Tours.

CRUSADE AGAINST DOGS.

In each quarter of Paris there are a set of men known as Municipal Inspectors, who go about the city wearing a broad red scarf or sash, sometimes about the waist, sometimes over the shoulder, whose duty consists in poking their noses into the affairs of their neighbors. Their offices are sinecures, given to the most violent of the ignorant portion of the party, for the purpose of keeping them quiet. Something must be done for them to keep them out of mischief and to prevent them from forcing their way into the Hotel de Ville to claim a seat among the members of the Government or to borrow twenty-five cents. These officials must do something to earn their salary and the privilege of wearing a red sash, and as nearly all of the unprotected girls have been arrested or have grown wary, they search for mare's nests in the best-conducted houses of their quarter. Sometimes it is one thing, sometimes another—always something to give an inutile annoyance to the comfortable class. The latest discovery of these municipal inspectors is that the dogs of Paris come under the head of Les bouches inutiles; that they consume without rendering any service to the national defense, and that the number of dogs inscribed upon the lists cut eighteen thousand kilogrammes of bread each day of the siege. This amount of daily bread the inspectors propose to save by executing the dogs—by exterminating the canine race. Dogberry himself could not have given a better example of the wisdom of municipal inspectors. This blow is aimed at the rich or the better classes of Paris. There are cities, Constantinople for example, where every poor man keeps a dog, and every d—d poor man keeps two, but in Paris only the well-to-do citizens are given to these brute companions. The poor are too apt to love their canine pets, and have not the money to offer rewards for their recovery. If this report is acted upon there will be great trouble in the French capital. It is certain that nine men out of every ten are always ready to divide their daily bread with their dog, feeling that the sacrifice is well repaid in a friendly, amical wag of the tail. It is equally certain that the dogs of Paris do not devour anything like this amount of bread which could be used by men. A few canine aristocrats may consume their quota of it, but by far the greater number have only the fragments of the family meal—old crusts soaked up in pot-liquor or moistened with the fat of the frying-pan, which else would go into the scavenger carts. The canine vagabonds roam the streets at an early hour to gather crumbs and the refuse scraps thrown away by each menage. They eat that which no member of the family has any wish to guard, and for this meagre repast they richly pay in affection, in gratitude, and in consolation. "We have sent away our wives and children," many men now cry; "leave us at least our brutes for companions during these trying times;" but this cry finds no echo in the hearts of the municipal inspectors. Is it possible that these men can ever have known the friendship of a dog? Have they any true ideas of loyalty and gratitude? A philosopher has said: "That which is the best in man—is the dog." Sir WALTER SCOTT and Sir EDWIN LANDSEER have removed our old ideas of canine character; and one is not now ashamed to confess that he has a great deal of dog in his nature, or that the best part of him is the dog. Every day our brutes set us an example of contentment, of courage, of loyalty, of gratitude, of fidelity, of patient endurance under the hardships of life, of a manly defense of our homes and our own; and these unfeeling men would now take away the living symbols of that which is best in ourselves!

TROCHU AND THE AMERICANS.

I have just heard that Gen. TROCHU has refused to let the Americans leave the city, giving as an excuse that it would have a bad effect upon the people. This is not the true reason, for it could have been easily said that only about one hundred out of near two thousand desired to leave, and those, being men called away by business. The Gazette de France, which is evidently TROCHU's friend, if not his organ, lets out the secret in several paragraphs hostile to the Americans, and sneering at Minister WASHBURNE. Mr. WASHBURNE, through Gen. BURNSIDE, asked for passes for a number of Americans who wished to cross the Prussian lines. After some hesitation Count BISMARCK assented, and demanded a list of the names for which passes could be written. This was done, it seems, without having asked the permission of Gen. TROCHU first, and he now declines to let the Americans go out under the Prussian passports. The Gazette de France (Legitimist) has several times given petty insinuations about the Minister, and it now openly says that he is trying to keep on both sides, but that he is far more friendly to the Prussians than to the French—witness his eagerness to protect the Germans ordered to leave Paris. This paper has some sneering words about the German women now in prison. It seems that among the women lately arrested, several were found of German birth. Mr. WASHBURNE asked for them, and the Gazette de France wants to know by what authority, and demands that they be at once sent on for trial. Since the one hundred thousand American volunteers are not forthcoming, the French are beginning to have some hard feeling, for they think it is the duty of the United States, being a Republic, to come at once to the aid of the Republic of France.

PRUSSIAN ADVANTAGES.

The Germans are certainly on scarred in almost everything regarding the defense of Paris. There is abundant evidence of this fact. The French Generals have not one single any whose statements can be relied on, and they are utterly in the dark as to the movements of the enemy. Neither their spies nor their scouts are of the slightest service. Need I give proof of a fact so evident? It was not known in Paris, even at head-quarters, when the Germans crossed the Seine. An official report of the 19th of September stated that the advanced guard of the enemy had just left Melun. This dispatch was written on the 18th of September at noon, and at that same hour the enemy had not only crossed the Seine and occupied Versailles, but had cut the last remaining line of railway. But it may be asked how the enemy could have passed the Orleans line without its being known at once; and in reply I give another proof of my statement: From the 14th to the 19th of September it was supposed that a body of four hundred Uhlans were ambushed in the wood of Meudon, and not a French soldier entered the wood from the moment the report was put in circulation. The men in the redoubt at Chatillon retired to avoid this ambush. But if this shows how badly the French Generals are served by their scouts, it also shows the disorganized state of the French force at that date. There is not a shadow of doubt that, if the Prussians had marched at once upon the city from Creteil or Charity-le-Bel, they could have taken it with the loss perhaps of five hundred men. Gen. TROCHU admits it. Today the defense is in a better position, and able to repulse any attack; but the French cannot wait to be attacked. Hunger will soon force them to take the offensive. An assault in force must soon be made and its success, I imagine, must depend more upon Messieurs CATHELINEAU and CHARRETTE, than upon Gen. TROCHU. If those names—historical in Brittany and La Vendee—are sufficient to rouse the people of the provinces tant mieux for France, tant pis for the Republique, an army able to force the outlying Germans back upon the main body before Paris, will enable TROCHU to drive the besiegers beyond the Marne, and then—and then M. CATHELINEAU will bring his troops into Paris under the banner of the fleur de lis, and to the rallying cry of "Vive Henri V.!" This is the plan of the campaign. If the armies without are beaten before they can reach the Prussian communications with the Rhine, a sortie in force will be made a la grace de Dieu, which will either raise the siege of the capital for a time, or the victorious Germans will enter the city upon the heels of a routed army.

MANIA FOR ARRESTS.

The mania for arrests is not yet over, and every day or two unprotected girls, whose supporters and friends are serving in the army, are taken to prison. The excuse for this is one which could only be given in a medical publication. But once started in any particular line, the Guards do not know where to stop. Several ladies of respectability have been arrested, and the wife of more than one member of the Guard has been taken away from home and children to spend a night in jail. This folly is worse than that of the "elective balloon signals," for honest women hate to suffer. An incident will show with what sense and judgment this work is followed. Day before yesterday, upon the Boulevard Capucines, in front of the Café de la Paix, passed an old lady, well dressed and with noble air. The lady was about seventy-six years of age, and a relative of one of the best-known editors of Paris. One would suppose that her age alone would place her above insult; but suddenly two members of the Guard pounced upon her and arrested her. Fortunately, an officer of Mobiles passed at the moment, and, aided by several men from the Amis de France, he repulsed the Guards, and, giving his arm to the old lady, led her, nearly fainting from fright, into the café. The Guards, in their wrath, did not fail to raise a crowd, but the lady was, fortunately, gotten away by the back door. The arrest was first made upon the charge of a malicious soutiseur, one of those women, a la Dr. MARY WALKER, who follow the troops. Since her fright, the old lady has been seriously ill in bed, under the charge of Dr. NELATON.

INTOLERANCE.

The course which the new Republic is taking may well alarm thinking men who have at heart the safety of the country. Paris is rushing headlong into anarchy, and through the incapacity of its chiefs. The Government dares not, or has not up to this time dared to suppress the dual authority which reigns. Every day the municipal authorities encroach upon the Government, and usurp some of its powers. How far this second power is allowed to proceed without reproof will be seen by the following order. M. MATTU, Mayor of the Eleventh Arrondissement, has discharged the Sisters of Charity and the Brothers who were teachers in the schools, and has posted up this order:

First—It is forbidden to teach or to make any kind of a prayer in the public schools.

Second—It is forbidden to teach the Catechism to pupils.

Third—It is forbidden to lead them to church on Sunday or to any of the parish Bible classes.

Fourth—It is forbidden to occupy them with what is called their first communion. The same orders have been given to the teachers in all the common schools (laiques) which exist in the arrondissement.

Such intolerance is insupportable. M. JULES MATTU can establish as many schools as he pleases in which the Bible is not read nor prayers allowed, but let him, at least, grant liberty of conscience and of teaching to others. Happily, this intolerance hasmet with reproof from the Government. M. JULES SIMON, Minister for Public Education, is known as a free-thinker, but at a moment when he is calling upon the Catholics to die in defense of the country he does well not to give his sanction to attacks upon their religion. M. MATTU has been removed.

PARISIAN JEST.

Despite the many examples of the danger of practical jokes, given in many volumes, the people do not seem to learn wisdom. We have lately had several sad experiences. A young wife carrying food to her husband on the ramparts was suddenly told, in joke, that he had just been killed by the Prussians. The poor woman fell, exhausted but not fainting, and although her husband soon came to her, she could not be roused from her lethargy. She died during the night. The next day a woman ran to the house of a neighbor to say that her husband had just been killed. When the husband came back at night he found his wife a maniac, and there are feeble hopes of her recovery. A lady is now seriously ill because told that her son had been killed. Such practical jokes ought to be made crimes under the law. W. R.

A Railroad Train on Fire—Burning of a Car-Load of Furniture.

From the Hartford Times, Nov. 19.

While the night freight train on the Hartford and Providence Railroad at 3 o'clock yesterday morning, on reaching Vernon from the East, was in the act of whistling for the watchman to switch off the cars destined for the Rockville branch road, a mass of flame was discovered bursting from a car laden with furniture. The signal was instantly changed to one which led to an instant detaching of the burning car, and it was speedily enveloped in flames, and consumed, with its contents. These had been consigned to PETER WYNDEYER, a dealer at Rockville. We do not learn the amount of the loss, which must be considerable, but suppose it will fall upon the [illegible] company. The company have been [illegible] the last eight or nine days. In [illegible] smashed up three locomotives—Bridgeport, one at Willimantic [illegible] Point, R. I.—and all in consequence [illegible] switches. The one at Norwich [illegible] as we hear it, of $6,000, and the one at Willimantic of $10,000; the loss at River Point we do not learn.

AMUSEMENTS.

THEATRICAL,

ANNOUNCEMENTS FOR TO-NIGHT.

Changes of programme at several City theatres invite attention. To-night, at Wallack's, "The School for Scandal" will be performed for the first time this season. At the Fifth-avenue "The Hunchback" will be represented. At the Fourteenth-street house, "Charlotte Corday" will be played. At Lina Edwin's, the fresh bill will include a new burlesque of "Faust," a new farce entitled "Love Among the Roses," and "Damon Jaffer Jenkins." Elsewhere, the entertainments of the past week are to be witnessed still.

Musical.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

The first of the fresh series of Saturday Popular Concerts, to be given at Association Hall, was attended, day before yesterday, by a very numerous audience. It seems to us that a more brilliant opening entertainment might have been devised. But three artists appeared, and no instrumental music, except the too liberal organ contributions of Signor MORA, was offered. Signor RONCONI, Mlle. ANTOINETTE RONCONI and Mr. J. N. HULLEY were the performers in question. Signor RONCONI's art is too generally admired to need new assurances of appreciation on our part. Mlle. RONCONI's voice is by no means strong, but it has been carefully trained, and her singing is unquestionably pleasant. Mr. HULLEY is a tenor of moderate merit. The programme rendered consisted of the duet from "Don Pasquale," the air from "Beatrice Di Tenda," PETRELLA'S "Carnival of Venice," AUBER'S "Slumber Song" and the everlasting duet from "L'Elisire." The execution of these compositions was varied by the organ performances of Signor MORA, whose talent and untiring industry were once more displayed.

MISS NILSSON'S CONCERT.

Miss NILSSON's return from Boston and the other minor places she has honored with her presence, will take place on Tuesday, and on Wednesday evening she will sing at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The artists already known will surround her. Friday, at Steinway Hall, she will be heard for the first time in oratorio, "The Messiah" will be interpreted, Miss NILSSON being added in its execution by Miss. PAULINE CANISSA—who, we trust, will have recovered her health ere the day named,—by Miss ANNIE LOUISE CARY, and by Messrs. GEORGE SIMPSON and M. W. WHITNEY. Choral duty will be performed by the Mendelssohn Union, and that body, as well as the grand orchestra, will be under the guidance of Mr. GEORGE BRISTOW. The farewell matinée—the fourth or fifth, we believe—is to occur on Saturday. There is also to be a twelfth or thirteenth farewell concert, when "The Messiah" will be repeated, on the following Tuesday.

MISS KREBS' CONCERT.

We have already alluded to the concert which Miss MARIE KREBS is to give at Steinway Hall, on Wednesday evening next. We now note that the artists assisting her are Mme. KREBS-MICHALESI, contralto; Mr. C. HAMM, violinist, and Mr. C. WERNER, violoncellist. The programme to be interpreted appears too strongly to the admirer of classical music not to deserve reproduction. We therefore reprint it, with the remark that the compositions bearing Nos. 4, 5, 6, 8 and 9 will be heard in public in this country, for the first time, on Wednesday.

PROGRAMME.

1. Trio, for piano, violin and violoncello, op. 49, D minor.....Mendelssohn
Miss Marie Krebs, Messrs. C. Hamm and Chas. Werner.
2. Der Wanderer.....F. Schubert

THE McGARRAHAN CASE.

General Butler's View of It.

The following has been sent to us for publication from the Standard office:

LOWELL, Nov. 17, 1870.

To the Editor of the New-York Standard:

My attention has been called to the several statements of the newspapers about the McGarrahan claim, and its relation to the controversy between Secretary COX and the President. I do not think the merits and the position of the case are exactly understood by the country; certainly one view of them has not, to my knowledge, been stated.

It became my duty, as a member of the Judiciary Committee of the House, to take part in the investigation of the case, and to hear the very long and able arguments on either side in behalf of the McGarrahan claim and that of the New-Idria Company for many days during the last Congress; and after the fullest investigation and the most patient thought I could give to the subject—and, I will add, from motives of personal friendship to those urging the claim on the part of McGARRAHAN—I found myself unable to come to the conclusion that McGARRAHAN had any rights in the premises.

His claim may be stated briefly in a few words. About at the very moment of the abandonment of California by MICHAEL TORRENA, the Mexican Governor, one of the clerks in the office at his commissary, VICENTE P. GOMEZ, claims that MICHAEL TORRENA gave him a grant of the large amount of land now in dispute, containing many leagues, and alleged to be worth a number of millions. The proper and formal documentary evidence, however, of title were not found in the Mexican archives. The claim was brought before the Land Commission established by Congress to adjust such titles, and was by them rejected. Upon appeal to the District Court, however, after the decision of the Fremont case, the claim was adjudicated by that Court in favor of GOMEZ, the clerk in the Commissary Department, under whom McGARRAHAN claims. But the unfortunate fact was that one FACUNDO ORD, the United States District Attorney, who ought to have protected the rights of the United States, was at the same moment a joint owner in the claim, having purchased half of it of GOMEZ—a fact which, in my judgment, taints the whole proceeding, and this taint is not in any way lessened because in other Mexican grants GOMEZ admits that he was accustomed to forge the title grants in such claims, showing his capability in that line by doing it upon Court in presence of the Judge. After adjudication of the District Court, and before any appeal was taken, McGARRAHAN, without any notice of the fraud of GOMEZ, for aught that appears, except that the papers show that ORD, the District-Attorney, was owner of an interest in the claim, bonafide claim for a valuable consideration.

But the United States, represented by the late EDWIN M. STANTON, afterward appealed the case to the Supreme Court, and after proceedings there of great length and cost—some of which could well have been different, and which it is unnecessary to go into—the claim was adjudicated as wholly void and set aside.

In the meantime, some four persons had entered upon the land under the mining laws of California, and under the name of the New-Idria Mining Company had developed the quicksilver mine in the land in question, as we allege, to some five millions of dollars. This Company has always appeared in the Courts and before Congress in various forms as the opponents of McGARRAHAN, claiming title to the land, and the question has always been dealt with as if it were one interesting only to those two claimants.

McGARRAHAN sought an act of Congress conferring the title of the land to himself upon the ground that he bought without knowledge of any defect in the GOMEZ title, if any exists, after the judgment of a United States Court had been given confirming that title. The majority of the Committee were not convinced of the validity of his claim or of his equitable rights, because, first, GOMEZ did not appear ever to have had any title, and secondly, that the very ingenious and able attempt to import [illegible] United States had spent some quarter of a million of dollars, more or less, in defending the land from McGARRAHAN's claim, all that money seemed to have been spent in the interest of the New-Idria Mining Company, and that member of the Committee desired to inquire by what title the New-Idria Mining Company claimed to hold the land, and was informed it was only under the mining laws of California. He then raised the question in the Committee how it was that four persons, who could only hold, under the mining laws of California, as it was understood, one thousand feet each of mining lands, could claim many leagues of land against the United States.

In the waning hours of the session, just then closing, there was no time to summon the New-Idria Mining Company to make good their title, or further to investigate the same, and it was suggested that the whole matter lie over till the next Congress, and that in the meantime no patent should issue to anybody until the rights of the United States could be determined.

It seems that during the vacation the New-Idria Company pressed upon Secretary COX, and he was about, as his letter shows, to issue a patent to them, which would have been good as against the United States. The President interfered to prevent it. It is generally understood that that interference is in behalf of McGARRAHAN. I do not believe that McGARRAHAN has any interest in the question whatever, but that the people of the United States have a right, millions of property in that claim, which an earnest and careful investigation, in which the Government should be represented, will show to belong to it. The President has only been holding the title to the land in abeyance until the Congress of the House of Representatives get through with the investigation, and determine what the rights of the United States are in the premises. For this I think he ought to have the thanks of all honest and judicious men.

I am yours, very truly,

BENJ. F. BUTLER.

Methodist Missionary Society Anniversary—Interesting Revelations Concerning the Works in India and China.

The fifty-second anniversary of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church was commenced, yesterday, in St. John's Church, Bedford-avenue, Brooklyn, E. D. The house was crowded in the afternoon, and filled in the evening. Hon. GEORGE G. REYNOLDS presided at 3 P. M., and addresses were made by Revs. C. W. JUDD and J. D. BROWN, of India. In the evening, Rev. Dr. HARRIS, Corresponding Secretary of the Society, presided, and addresses were delivered by Rev. S. I. BALDWIN, missionary to China, and Mr. LING CHA-CHA, a native Chinese Christian, who had recently come hither. From the remarks of the Indian missionaries it appeared that they are meeting with very encouraging success in that field; that there are in India 26,000 native Christians gathered into churches, 2,000 native preachers, twenty-five local preachers, and the same number of ministerial persons sending forth religious teaching for the people in their native dialects; that there are besides 2,000 boys' schools, and 800 girls' schools, into which are gathered 30,000 girls and 100,000 boys, who receive not only a good common school education, but wholesome Christian instruction. One church of 50 members was recited as having subscribed $200 for the support of its poor last year—a sum very much larger than many of our American churches give to similar objects. And to show how thoroughly Christianized these heathen people become, it was stated that one wealthy native convert had devoted his entire property to the cause of Christianity in India. There is a general feeling among the people of that country that Hindooism is sick unto death, and that no medicine can possibly save it, and illustrations, numerous and interesting, were given to show that they expect the Christian religion to displace their idolatrous worship. Strong appeals for men and money to maintain and extend the missions there were accordingly made.

The address of Rev. Mr. BALDWIN, who has been twelve years in China, set forth the obstacles which the missionaries meet in that land. The first is in the language, which requires the mastering of 8,000 different characters before they can read the Bible or attempt a translation of it. But, after that is accomplished, a greater difficulty is met in the spoken language, which requires a life-time to thoroughly understand. One word will often express a dozen things and ideas, which can only be distinguished from each other by the tones in which they are uttered. The same word that expresses a fork—chat—also signifies a bundle of wood, and the two are known only by the tone. So also of the character that expresses love and determination, and also of the character that signifies soldiers and locies. Several amusing illustrations of the errors into which missionaries constantly fall in the use of these spoken characters were given by Mr. BALDWIN. Of himself he remarked that he was once preaching to a very attentive audience, and to make sure that they understood what he said, he asked them once and again, as the literal translation of the Chinese is, "Do you know how to hear?" but, by changing the tone on the last word every time, he made it to them "love," which puzzled and amused them. He did not know the mistake until next day, when one of his hearers pointed it out to him. The lives and characters of the foreigners who reside in the sea-ports are also great obstacles to the spread of Christianity in the large cities—far greater than the systems of idolatry of the natives. Some of these things were vividly pointed out.

The remarks of Mr. LING CHA-CHA showed him to be a man of sound Christian knowledge and deep religious feeling.

One of the largest cotton mills in this State is located at Schuylerville, Saratoga County. They furnish employment for 550 hands, male and female, run 831 looms, 24,000 spindles, consume 3,000 bales of cotton per year, turn out 6,960,400 yards of manufactured material per year, and pay $108,000 per year in wages.

A painter named LEIGH recently committed suicide by throwing himself from a steamboat on the passage from St. Paul to St. Louis. He had deserted his wife and family at the former city, intending to go to Texas, but being seized with a remorse of conscience on the way, he gave his money to the clerk of the boat and jumped down between the wheels before any attempt could be made to prevent him.

The following proclamation has been issued by Gov. MCCLURG, of Missouri:

Whereas, The Lord He is the God by whom nations are counted as the small dust of the balance; who sends prosperity, pestilence, or sword at His pleasure; who exalts a righteous people and destroys a wicked; it behoves the people to bow before Him with reverence; therefore, the 26th day of November, instant, is hereby appointed a day of Thanksgiving for past and prayer for future blessings.

The mysterious door-bell ringings which have attracted so much attention at Great Falls, N. H., since August last, were brought to a sudden termination the other night by the arrest of a woman, who had been foremost in favoring the theory that the work had been done by spirits. She was caught in the act of running away after pulling vigorously at a door-bell in the dead of night.

Two burglars, of St. Paul, Minn., aged respectively eight and ten years, were captured last week while engaged in pulling up goods at a music store, preparatory to removal. They had forced an entrance through the basement window, and, when discovered, were weighted with pennies and fractional currency taken from the money-drawers.

The Canadian telegraphs are entitled to the credit of having discovered how fast an earthquake travels. At Mimouski, when the late earthquake was made known to the operator there, he at once asked the Quebec man how he felt. The shock having arrived just as the latter was about to answer, it caused him to change his mind, and ask the Montreal man, 200 miles further on, whether he had felt it. The latter had just time to say "No" when the office was shaken to its foundation.

A Louisville man, who is dissatisfied with the plans of the United States engineers for improving the Ohio River, thinks it would be very much better to contract the width by reducing the bottom, by dredging it out. So that, instead of elevating the surface and increasing the current, an opposite effect would be produced, and, at the same time, all the water would fall into the deepened channel, causing the bar that would be laid bare to serve the purpose for which the dam was intended; that is, to contract the width.

By way of explaining the recent "unpleasantness" in the Amherst College Navy, the directors say: "The matter was in no wise personal. The charges against the Commodore were preferred, not by the President, but unanimously by the Board of Directors. The Committee of twelve decided that the charges were insufficient to warrant the suspension of the Commodore, but ten of them have signed a statement that they did not think him completely vindicated."

The public schools of New-Orleans were all opened for pupils last week. Some apprehensions were felt that an attempt would be made to mix the colored children with the whites, but they appear to have been unfounded. There is a dispute still unsettled between the School Board and the Ward Directors, from which a resolution has sprung prohibiting the admission of any scholar unless upon application to the President of the Board or some person by him designated.

Hold Robbery on the Norwich and Worcester Railroad—A Judge the Victim.

From the Norwich Bulletin, Nov. 18.

On Monday, as Judge MINOR was on his way to hold court in Brooklyn, a traveling valise containing clothing and other articles of the value of about $100, was stolen from him under the following circumstances: The Judge went into the depot at Plainfield junction, and set his valise on the bench in front of the ticket-office while he purchased a ticket for Danielsonville, after which he took it up and entered the car, placing the bag on a seat at the rear end, he taking a seat further forward. A man was seen to enter, take up the valise and pass up through the car and out at the front. A lady seeing the operation informed the Judge, who followed the man, while a friend of his went out at the rear of the car. They overtook the valise operator on the platform, but as soon ascertained that the valise in his possession was not the one in question. The Providence train moved off at this moment, and "all aboard" was given for the Worcester passengers. The man having the valise stepped on as did the Judge and his friend, he supposing that by mistake he had taken the wrong valise in the depot. In the game was a deeper one, the valise operator having unobtrusively taken the Judge's valise and exchanged with a confederate at the car door, who took care of that while the other scamp threw the lower of the scent.

Gen. Lafayette's Wonderful Memory.

To the Editor of the Richmond Whig:

It was often remarked of Gen. LAFAYETTE, when he was on his tour through the United States, in 1824, he possessed, in a very extraordinary degree, the faculty of recognizing at a glance his old comrades in arms, whom he had not seen for fifty years. He could call by name as well the privates in the ranks as the highest officers of the line.

The following incident was related to me in the year 1829, by the late Judge BROOKE, of the Court of Appeals in this State, who had been a Captain in the war of the Revolution:

While LAFAYETTE was in Richmond a guest of Virginia, an obscure individual, living in Person County, N. C., who was known in the Revolutionary army as Sergeant HOOD, who belonged to the company commanded by Capt. BROOKE, and who, on account of his singular daring and uniform good conduct, was a pet of his officers, visited the Capitol for the purpose of greeting his old commanding General.

Judge BROOKE said that on walking across the Capitol square one morning, he met an old man who inquired of him if he could direct him to the quarters of Gen. LAFAYETTE, adding that he fought under him when he was a youth, and had come 120 miles to see him. Before the Judge had time to respond, the stranger said to him, "Is not this Capt. BROOKE to whom I am talking?"

On receiving an affirmative, he said, "You do not appear to recognise me; I am Sergeant HOOD, who belonged to your company during the Revolutionary War." The Judge told me that he was immediately filled with the most pleasant recollections of Sergeant's many deeds of valor performed under his own inspection, that he gave him a cordial grasp, and went with him to LAFAYETTE'S room.

On entering, and before a word was spoken by any one else, the Marquis, who was in a remote part of the room, eagerly approached the stranger, old, ragged, and exclaiming, "Sergeant HOOD," fell on his neck and wept tears of joy.

He recognized this humble private in an instant, and recounted some of his deeds of daring to the astonished company.

That he should have recognized any of his brother officers, after the separation of more than half a century, during which time they must have undergone the usual change wrought in one's appearance by old age, while his own eyes must have "grown dim," was a matter of no little surprise, but that he should have hailed this humble private in the ranks by name, excited the astonishment of all who were present.

The Judge remarked that it was one of the most agreeable and joyful reunions in which he ever participated. THOMAS P. ATKINSON.

DANVILLE, Va., Nov. 16, 1870.

The Hohrman Murder—Announcing the Verdict—Motion for a New Trial.

When the jury returned so the Court-room at Philadelphia with a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree against HAHMAN, "the moment," says the Philadelphia Inquirer, "was a very solemn one; the jurors and prisoner were standing, and while several of the former were so much affected that they wept as children, the latter did not betray the least sign of emotion though it was his life, said 'Thou shalt die by the hand of man.' At the instance of the prisoner's counsel the jury was polled, and each gentleman repeated the verdict. They were then thanked by the Judge for the attention they had given the case, and were discharged. They express themselves highly satisfied with the comforts that were provided for them during their long confinement. No demonstration from the crowd marred the decorum of the proceedings, and when the doomed man was hurried from the dock to the van, the audience quickly deserted the room. The prisoner's sister came in after he had gone away, and, upon hearing the result, uttered most piteous cries and moans, and had to be conducted to one of the side rooms. The prisoner was brought back for a few moments, to be present while his counsel made a motion for a new trial, and was then taken to prison. The reasons for the motion will be filed within four days."

The Court then adjourned.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

At Vanderbilt Landing, S. I., on Saturday, (Nov. 19,) D. M. SEAMAN held a large auction sale of lots located at Stapleton. The sale was made by order of the Supreme Court in partition, under the direction of DANIEL P. INGRAHAM, Jr., referee, and thirty-four lots in all were disposed of. Notwithstanding the severe weather, quite a large number of buyers were in attendance, the auction being held within doors, at one of the hotels on the landing. The prices realized were fair. The details of the transaction will be found in the summary appended.

In reviewing the transactions of the past week but little remains to be said in the opinions expressed in this column, in the various daily reports of sales made. The aggregate of the week's business is the largest for the year, a greater amount of property having been disposed of at public sale than for the same period of any previous month of this year. The result of the operations, however, has been far from satisfactory, and if we except the sale of the Dyckman property, on Wednesday, when 236 lots were sold for $146,450, the remaining sales of the week have occasioned great disappointment to all concerned. The assessed value of Central Park lots, on Thursday, was suspended after twenty-eight lots had been sold, and for these, the prices realized were far below their estimated value. The total of this sale amounted to $260,050. Some surprise has been expressed, that while the sale of the Dyckman estate should have met with success, the sale of Park property should have been a comparative failure. Yet the reason for this state of affairs is evident, for there is no real comparison between the properties offered. For an investment in the lots around the Park, a large amount of capital is required, and the risk of non-payment is also great, especially in the present unsettled condition of the real estate market. On the other hand, in purchasing a lot in the locality where the Dyckman property is situated, the money required for the title to an entire block, is in comparison small; and in small sums, the investor can afford to wait for the natural increase in the value of property in being morally certain of realizing a handsome profit on the investment. All the lots around the Park are already held at high figures, and when placed upon the market in large quantities, as was the case on Thursday, a different result than the one followed could hardly be expected. The total of the week's business at the Exchange, in bona fide sales, amounts to $694,870. In addition to this sum, nominal sales have been made to the amount of $90,000, making the grand total as recorded in the Exchange books, $1,377,220. The auctioneers engaged in these transactions were as follows: Sale of the Dyckman estate, V. K. Stevenson, Son & Co., B. P. Fairchild, auctioneer; Central Park lots, owned by Thomas T. Ferris, Adrian H. Muller, E. R. Wilkins & Co.; miscellaneous sales, Wetmore, Jones, Garretson, A. J. Bleecker, Son & Co., Roberts & McGuire, Dunger, Ketcham & Co., E. F. Raymond and D. M. Seaman. Wyckoff & Little, of Brooklyn, also sold at the Exchange, on Thursday, property in that city, valued at $16,100.

In Brooklyn, at the Commercial Exchange there located, J. COLE sold thereat, on Tuesday last, conducted a very successful sale of Prospect Park lots, the transaction, in the aggregate, amounting to $111,420. Seventy-four of the lots sold belonged to the estate of THEODORE FOSTER, deceased; and the average price realized was very satisfactory. As we said last week, more activity characterizes the real estate market in Brooklyn than in New-York, and another large sale of lots is advertised by Mr. COLE, to take place at the Exchange, in that city, on To-morrow. The property to be sold comprises fifty-six lots, located respectively on First and Second avenues, and on Fourth-street and Forty-second street. The sale is a positive one, by order of executors, and the property will be offered upon liberal terms.

The transfer record of the past week is a good one, and although a depression marks the sale of property at auction, in private transactions there is nothing to indicate any inactivity. The following were the figures in the totals for the week ending Friday, Nov. 11: Number of transfers, New-York 110, value of property, $1,371,088. Number of transfers, Brooklyn 155, value of property, $1,202,350. For the past week, ending Friday, Nov. 18, the table stands as follows:

	No. of transfers, New-York.	Value.	No. of transfers, Brooklyn.	Value.
Saturday, Nov. 12	18	$570,000	32	$173,180
Monday, Nov. 14	9	417,200	29	88,300
Tuesday, Nov. 15	12	123,200	31	199,810
Wednesday, Nov. 16	22	760,500	30	215,455
Thursday, Nov. 17	14	220,225	21	327,650
Friday, Nov. 18	11	301,835	24	138,677
Total	86	$2,442,960	169	$1,101,060

Among the important transfers recorded during the week the following are the most noticeable: Plot of ground on the north-east corner of Fourth-avenue and Sixty-fifth-street, in size, 125.5x80x95x80x100.6, $286,000; three lots north side of Fifty-eighth-street, extending through to Fifty-ninth-street, 175 feet west of Fifth-avenue Plaza, plot 75x203.3, sold together, $180,000. At the Exchange sales, on Thursday, it will be remembered that four similar lots located on Sixth-avenue were struck off at the rate of $28,000 per lot. This last sale is said to have been a genuine one, and if so, from the other figures given above, the property was obtained at a bargain. During the present week but few sales are as yet advertised, and Thanksgiving Day occurring during the week, business will not probably be active. The only sales thus far noticed in addition to the Brooklyn auction above mentioned, are for to-morrow at the Exchange as follows: By LAWRENCE, OAKLEY & FLEURY, a large sale of lots at Stadt Wurtemburg, in Queens County, Long Island. Several lots near Fort Washington, formerly belonging to the Dyckman estate, and purchased at the first sale in June last, and also a house and lot on Adams-street in Brooklyn.

JAMES M. MILLER will also, to-morrow, at the Exchange, offer at public auction, the leasehold premises running from East Houston to Second streets, known as No. 404 East Houston-street and No. 108 Second-street, with the improvements thereon, said premises being 25 feet in width on each street, and 86 feet 3 inches in depth on the easterly side, and 79 feet 9 inches on the westerly side, more or less. The lease is from the Wynkoop estate, for twenty-one years, from May 1, 1869, at a rent of $185 per annum, with a covenant for renewal or to pay for the building. Other particulars in regard to this transaction can be obtained from the auctioneer, No. 23 Pine-street.

Among the important sales soon to take place is one by MULLER, WILKINS & Co. next week, of a large number of valuable City lots, and the week following by V. K. STEVENSON, SON & Co., of the block on Fifth-avenue, bounded by Seventy-eighth, Seventy-ninth streets and Madison-avenue. This is one of the most desirable pieces of property in New-York ever offered at auction, and the sale is positively announced to take place Dec. 8, unless the lots are previously disposed of at private sale.

WILLIAM SINCLAIR, Jr., & Co., real estate brokers, advertise a large line of valuable property, at private sale and otherwise, full particulars in reference to which can be obtained at their office, No. 9 Pine-street.

REAL ESTATE AT AUCTION.

JAMES M. MILLER, Auctioneer—Office, No. 2 Pine-st.

EXECUTOR'S SALE OF VALUABLE LEASEHOLD PREMISES ON EAST HOUSTON AND SECOND STS.

JAMES M. MILLER, Auctioneer, will sell at auction on TUESDAY, Nov. 22, 1870, at 12 o'clock M., at the Exchange Sales-room, No. 111 Broadway, in the City of New-York, the leasehold premises running from East Houston to 24 feet north of No. 404 East Houston-st. and No. 108 2d-st., with the improvements thereon, said premises being twenty feet in width on each street, and sixty-eight feet three inches in depth on the easterly side, and seventy feet nine inches on the westerly side, more or less. The lease is from the Wynkoop estate, for twenty-one years, from May 1, 1869, at a rent of $185 per annum, with a covenant for renewal or to pay for the building. Other particulars in regard to this transaction can be obtained from the auctioneer, No. 23 Pine-street.

Among the important sales soon to take place is one by MULLER, WILKINS & Co. next week, of a large number of valuable City lots, and the week following by V. K. STEVENSON, SON & Co., of the block on Fifth-avenue, bounded by Seventy-eighth, Seventy-ninth streets and Madison-avenue. This is one of the most desirable pieces of property in New-York ever offered at auction, and the sale is positively announced to take place Dec. 8, unless the lots are previously disposed of at private sale.

WILLIAM SINCLAIR, Jr., & Co., real estate brokers, advertise a large line of valuable property, at private sale and otherwise, full particulars in reference to which can be obtained at their office, No. 9 Pine-street.

REAL ESTATE AT AUCTION.

BY A. LAWRENCE, Auctioneer.

BY LAWRENCE, OAKLEY & FLEURY, THURSDAY, Nov. 21, at 12 o'clock, at the Exchange Salesroom, No. 111 Broadway:

Valuable plot of ground, each 100 feet square, in Stadt Wurtemburg, Queens County, L. I.

Also, valuable property near Fort Washington, a part of the Dyckman estate. Also, a frame story and half house and lot, No. 216 Adams-st., Brooklyn; house contains modern improvements and in perfect order.

PROPOSALS.

PROPOSALS FOR LIVE-OAK.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR, WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 4, 1870.

Sealed proposals for the delivery of 300,000 cubic feet of Live-oak timber, of the best quality, in each of the Navy-yards at Charlestown, Mass., and Brooklyn, N. Y., will be received at this Bureau until the sixth (6th) day of December next.

Those proposals must be indorsed "Proposals for Live-oak," that they may be distinguished from other business letters.

The offers may be for one or both yards, but must be for the whole quantity in each yard, and, as required by law, must be accompanied by a guarantee. Sureties in the full estimated amount will be required to sign the contract, and, as additional and collateral security, twenty-five (25) per centum will be withheld on the amount of each delivery until the contract is satisfactorily completed.

In all the deliveries of the timber, there must be a fair proportion of the crooked, difficult and crooked pieces; other wise there will be withheld such further amount, in addition to the 25 per centum as may be judged sufficient to secure the public interest, until such proportion is delivered. Five per centum of the remaining 75 per centum will be withheld on the amount of each delivery until the contract is satisfactorily completed.

In all the deliveries of the timber, there must be a fair proportion of the difficult and crooked pieces; otherwise there will be withheld such further amount, in addition to the 25 per centum as may be judged sufficient to secure the public interest, until such proportion is delivered. Five per centum of the remaining 75 per centum will be withheld on the amount of each delivery until the contract is satisfactorily completed.

The whole amount contracted for in this case must be delivered on or before the 1st of February, 1871.

The Department reserves the right to reject any and all bids for any timber under this advertisement, if considered not to be the interest of the Government to accept them, and to require satisfactory evidence that the parties to the bids are responsible, and are made by responsible persons.

FORM OF OFFER.

(Which, if from a firm, must be signed by all the members.)

I, (or we,) of _____, in the state of _____, hereby agree to furnish and deliver in the United States Navy-yard at _____ the number of _____ cubic feet of Live-oak timber, in conformity with the advertisement of the Bureau of Construction and Repair of the date of November 5, 1870, viz:

_____ cubic feet, curved timber, at $_

MORAL COURAGE

Sermon by Rev. Geo. H. Hepworth at the Church of the Messiah.

REV. GEO. H. HEPWORTH, preached to an overflowing congregation last evening in the Church of the Messiah, corner of Park-avenue and Thirty-fourth-street. The subject of his discourse was "Moral Courage," and he selected as his text the words: "Then began he to curse and swear, saying, I know not the man." He was going to talk, he said, on moral courage, and his theme was illustrated by the incident of the text. Only a few days before the days of the apostles, Jesus had addressed to Peter but said to Jesus of his own accord, "I will follow Thee to the death, though all near forsake thee, yet will not I." True, the words were uttered in a moment of passion, but in the hour of danger he should not have forsaken his master. In the hour of danger he purchased his present safety by three black lies. What a contrast between the two personages! The one timid and distrustful of spiritual things, the other resting in a Divine calmness, which feared no human power. Jesus has become the type of our lives. We feel the magnificent proportions of his character and endeavor to assimilate. There are two qualities in nature, bravery and courage, the latter of which is far higher than the former. A man in the heat of battle will push into the thickest of the fight recklessness of danger and consequences. He levels himself at the interests of his country. The inspiration is Divine one. To which at one we bow down in homage. There is another, a higher quality, that of courage—a courage which we see in everyday life. A short time since three men attempted to cross the Niagara River in a boat. One of the party reaching out his oar to push aside a piece of ice, had it snapped in twain. He was left with the broken oar and fascinating toward the mad torrent. On the bank stood a hardy farmer, who saw the destruction to which they were hastening. Calmly and deliberately he reckoned the cost, and having done this, he entered his skiff, and safter a great effort reached the imperiled boat. The three men leaped into his skiff, and with two strong oars they were brought safe to land, after being almost on the very brink of destruction. The man was not only brave; he was exercising that far higher quality, courage. If the dwellings of this City could be unroofed, thousands of similar acts of courage could be revealed. The poor sewing woman in her garret, sewing her soul away, and the merchant who forgets his losses in renewed struggles, are heroes of the highest type. If he would condense his whole ideas on this subject to the guidance of young men, he would say to them, "Have an opinion and stick to it." There are those, and they are known by thousands, who go with the tide. They find it easier to go with the tide than to swim against it. Such men never do anything without looking at each other and asking "May I?" The man of moral courge never asks the world for its opinion, but rather turns to his conscience, and says, "May I do it?" If conscience says "yes," then he does it, whether it please society or not. Some will not join a church because they think they avoid responsibility thereby. Such conduct reminded him of a man throwing stones at another, and hiding behind a fence so that he shall not be seen. The moral law binds all, because they are men, because they are women, to assume their just moral responsibility. Badness always leaves the sting behind it. A bad man is not at peace. He is constantly haunted by his own superstitions. Evil cheats mankind out of everything, and gives nothing in return. There is not a bad man in all God's universe who is happy because the moral law is against him. Badness is like a kicking gun; it will hurt the man who he must hurt by the recoil. He has a bitterness and remorse continually in his heart. On the other hand, a good man is always brave. Even the moment a man takes a resolution to break off a bad habit, he feels stronger and straighter, and looks boldly in the face of his fellow-citizens and steadier gaze. The young must make an allegiance to the truth, and publish it. Not that they shall advertise it, but that they shall not cover it up. To do this, they ought to belong to some church. If they attend at the altar while the prayers of the congregation are made in their behalf, and there take a resolution to be good men, good sons, good husbands and fathers, they realize accumulating moral strength from that very act. Today, as four thousand years ago, David sings the twenty-third Psalm, the most beautiful of them all, and here as four thousand years ago, Jesus of Nazareth, who sits at the right hand of God, utters His sublime precepts and proclaims His divine character for imitation. In conclusion, men and women must have a real, fixed belief. It must be such a belief as to become a great central fact, which shall become the pivot on which life turns. Let a parent believe in immortality, and though he or she may weep for their lost child, yet have they consolation in the conviction, the unwavering faith that, when the door swings ajar, the child whom they thought dead shall greet their ear in the next world and be the same prattle of the dear one who entered before them. To have this true moral courage of the good, we must have this true and fixed faith. Without this faith we are without courage.

CHRISTIAN BENEVOLENCE.

Sermon by Rev. Halsey W. Knapp at the Plymouth Baptist Church.

Yesterday morning a sermon was preached by Rev. HALSEY W. KNAPP, at the Plymouth Baptist Church, in Fifty-first-street, near Tenth-avenue, upon the subject of Christian benevolence. The occasion was the second anniversary of the establishment of the church at that place, and the attendance was unusually large. The reverend gentleman took his text as follows: "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver." II. Corinthians, ix. 7. The speaker commenced by saying, that there were various methods of contributing to the support of Christianity and the spread of the Gospel. Some churches raised funds by such popular means as fairs, concerts and lectures. If these things were honestly and rightly conducted, no doubt the proceeds realized, if applied to relieve the needs and the wants of a church, would be acceptable to the Master. Yet he must remind his hearers that this was not God's plan of doing what is necessary to be done for the sustaining of his cause upon the earth. God was no beggar, and none of his poor creatures should treat him so much. Whatever is given for the cause of Christ should be given voluntarily, freely, and as a matter of principle. God would be most honored and glorified in that way. He did not believe in any such second hand, half-compulsory kind of Christian benevolence. There are, he said, enough means in every evangelical denomination to abundantly sustain it. There are enough of the world's goods in the Baptist denomination to place the standard of the Cross in every portion of the globe. Church members must not look upon the giving of money to add weak Churches as a favor to God. On the contrary it was a great favor, a great boon, to all members to give, and they ought to be very thankful if they were able to do so. He then somewhat divided his subject into three parts, namely: First, the amount; secondly, the manner, and thirdly the motive which should govern all in contributing for Gospel purposes. As to the amount with many persons the same trouble existed now that did eighteen hundred years ago. Some would say, let every one have God has blessed him. He knew a brother once who, when poor, was bounteously—gave far beyond his means. When that same brother became rich he dealt out his money with a sparing, yea, even with a niggardly hand. He knew another brother in the Lord who laid all his capital on God's altar, and God afterward prospered him to such an extent that he was ten times richer in worldly wealth than ever before. Some had said to him, "We give now to the Church more than we can really afford." The speaker did not doubt they were sincere in such an assertion, but the truth was they were mistaken. No one ever gave to God and to God's cause more than he could afford. The true doctrine is to give according to the purpose of a generous heart. Then, secondly, as to the manner of giving. Most persons would say, "Oh, the manner is immaterial; all we want is the money, no matter how the donor presents it." The speaker begged leave to differ. God does care a great deal as to the manner of giving. Many give very grudgingly, and do not seem to know it. Some give to sustain their popularity; such give grudgingly, but of necessity. Benefactions of this kind are an offense to God. Others there are who, being unpopular among their fellows, give for the purpose of making themselves popular—for the purpose of wiping away the stigma which is attached to them. Others still donate for the Gospel because they are known to be liberal, generous souls, and they must do something to keep up their reputations. Persons had appealed to the speaker for charitable aid, and professed their request by saying: "Elder KNAPP, we know you are a generous and a very benevolent man." He could not let such people go away without telling them what his ideas were of true, disinterested benevolence. He had heard men say "I gave $100 to such and such a charitable institution just to get rid of the importunities of the agent." Giving for any cause from such a motive, was, he said, an insult to the Great Benefactor of all. Then there was another class who contributed sometimes very largely from motives of pride. He had sometimes been shocked at the spectacle of a man changing his subscription for a cause a neighbor, who subscribed subsequently, exceeded him in amount. Such things were all wrong. The speaker said that some time ago, as appeared in the newspaper reports, a certain rich Captain Rogers in the crowded audience at Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, had stated to his brethren there that he had been greatly prospered by God in worldly wealth the previous year. He had made over $100,000 clear profits. It far exceeded his expectations, and he was more thankful to God for his prosperity than for the same. Captain addressed his brethren of Plymouth Church as follows: "I stand here a year ago and the Lord had prospered me exceedingly—that He has been very good to me in the way of pecuniary prosperity. I have now to say that within the last year He has been better to me, been more merciful than ever. I have lost every cent of the money and all I was worth before." The moral the speaker wished to draw from this was that the giving with a liberal hand from right motives will not impoverish; that God will be in debt to the bonds of Heaven, in other words, "cast our bread upon the waters." The motives which should actuate one in acts of Christian benevolence were briefly stated by the speaker in conclusion. He knew well the motives which induce most persons to contribute pennies to street beggars. It was to get rid of their importunities. That was not a right motive in donating for the cause of God. Not should one contribute from pride, to gain popularity or to keep it. We should give in such a way as to show that we have an interest in the mankind man. We should give from high and holy motives. Referring to Plymouth Baptist Church, he said it was the most westerly church in the city, of their denomination. It had been planted there, said some of the wisest and most wretched elements of humanity to be found anywhere in this great Metropolis. It costs something, he continued, to plant a church in such a place. There are wretches within hearing distance who are as vile, as low, and as debauched as can be found anywhere. It costs little, comparatively, to establish a church amid the wealth, the fashion, and the refinement of the City. The debt now on this church, he said, would stagger almost any one. And here are our brethren away off in the Western wilds of the City, staggering under a debt which they have assumed for the purpose of planting the Gospel standard in such a desert place.

After the sermon the pastor of the church announced that there would be a collection taken up then, and another during the afternoon service. The amount necessary to be raised seemed to be about $7,000. It was stated that the lots upon which the church stands cost $24,000, and the erection of the edifice about $85,000. A collection was taken up and the services were brought to a close.

THE YOUTH OF THE PERIOD.

What He Should Be—Interesting Sunday Evening Discourse by Rev. W. W. Newell, D. D.

Rev. Dr. NEWELL delivered, last evening, the first of a series of Sunday evening lectures in the Presbyterian Church, Allen-street, near Grand. The subject, "The Young Man for the Times," attracted a large number of young men besides those belonging to the regular congregation, and the Doctor's practical remarks were listened to with great attention. He took his text from the thirteenth chapter of Acts and thirty-sixth verse: "For David, after he had served his own generation, fell on sleep." He introduced his subject by reference to the early history of David, and his distinguished exploits, which, he said, were proofs of Christian valor never surpassed in ancient or modern times. While only fifteen years old he was anointed by the Lord King over Israel. While a mere stripling he slew a lion and a bear, and, in the presence of his terrified army, stepped bravely forward and beheaded the Goliath who had so long defied the hosts of Israel. While young he also received the blessings of a grateful country. David was eminently a "young man for the times." He was a leader in his age and a savior of his race. God delivered the hostile nations into his hands, and honored him in the presence of the Generals and Princes of Israel. He had highly advantageous to David to enter on his noble exploits so young. It gave an impetus to all his future efforts, and the vigor of his manly strength and experience was devoted to carrying out fresh projects of usefulness. He would record his noble motto for the young men present. They were citizens of New-York and wherever born were to be Americans. A full sense of their capabilities for good or evil thrilled him with anxiety. They are placed in a City where the tendencies to good and evil are all powerful, said the speaker, and the history of with the upward and downward progress of whole battalions of young men. Each one of them may carry into the future a power for good or for evil. It would be his pleasing task to point them into paths of noble strife and final victory. It was not enough that in this nineteenth century they be merely honest, virtuous, or Christian men. They must be men of enterprise—"men for the times." In the history of the world there never has been a time so distinguished for golden projects and brilliant achievements as the present. One of the most striking characteristics of the age is the practical character. It is an age of freedom both of thought and action, and also of mighty changes and noble reforms. The bayonets of France are removed from Rome, and allegiance to an infallible Pontiff is shouted by his once trembling slave, Victor Emanuel himself becomes a captive, and Pontiff claims a Republic and governs herself. God is destroying the shackles which have oppressed the mind, the chains which slavery has forged, and dynasties grown heavy with tyranny. This is a time of consolidation in governments and in thinking. The mind with which material had the particular spot in the Garden of Gethsemane become specially dear to Christ. Hither had He come for rest and comfort when He could go nowhere else, and here had His father and the angels ministered unto Him. Through and by this consecration of love this lonely temple in the garden, where Christ repaired for prayer flood out in glorious contrast to that other temple over against it which was but dead matter. At this point Mr. BEECHER asked why Christ had taken the three disciples mentioned to watch with Him, and answered, that like all other souls, only in a greater degree, He needed sympathy, and therefore had brought them with Him. In no other respect could they have been of any use to Him, and this demand manifested here by our Savior for human love and sympathy, exists also, he continued, in the hearts of the Father and Christ. It is a mistake to suppose that because God is perfect, perfect, he does not need human love. God created man because he wanted his love. I could not, said the reverend speaker, love a being that did not both need and reciprocate love. Being outside of and beyond the reach of sympathy may please the intellect, but cannot appeal to the human heart. All through the world we have indications of the truth of this; we see it in the strong affection of the mother, in the glow of the lover and in the clinging love of the little child. In these I recognize the divine just as I do the intellect of BEETHOVEN in the sonatas and melodious snatches of his music that I hear when passing along the street, or as, when looking into some mountain torrent, you see pieces of rock torn by the spirits from their resting places, you could, if you took time, go up the stream and lay them back in the very spot whence they were torn. So, with with these manifestations of affection. They are directly traceable back to the heart of God. This is the God-like element that is at work in every soul struggling to lift itself into purer and nobler manhood, whether it succeed or not. Young men, he said, he has who has learned to look with loathing upon his sins, even though he be without the power to resist them. And today watching with Christ means the uniting in concert with this eternal God-given tendency toward the higher and nobler. Wherever there is a poor, earnest soul needing help there is our opportunity to watch with Christ, and we will prove our attachment to the Savior by improving the opportunity.

In the evening Mr. BEECHER preached in the Lafayette-avenue Presbyterian Church, and the pastor of that church, Mr. CUYLER, occupied the Plymouth pulpit.

THE DESIGN OF PREACHING

A New-England Clergyman Views on the Subject—Sermon by Rev. Merrill Richardson.

REV. MERRILL RICHARDSON, late of Worcester, Mass., delivered his first pastoral discourse at the New-England Congregational Church, corner Forty-seventh-street and Madison-avenue, yesterday morning. The services of this young Congregational Church vary for some time conducted in the Chapel of Hungerford College, Fifth-avenue, but the present neat and commodious building, which was formerly an Episcopal church, has been lately rented by the congregation, and on Wednesday last Mr. RICHARDSON was installed as pastor. This judicious appointment cannot fail to increase its importance, for Mr. RICHARDSON has long been recognized as one of the most eminent and popular Congregational divines in the New-England States, and the large number of worshipers who attended yesterday morning and listened with earnest attention to the service, are good auguries of his success in his new sphere.

In his opening prayer he referred to the evil effects of the war in Europe, and fervently prayed for the time when nations should cease engaging in strife, world-wide building their wives up in righteousness and true holiness. He then read a portion of Scripture, and commented thereon, after which he selected his text from First Corinthians, fourteenth chapter and eighth verse, "For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?" The sermon was very able and argumentative, of which the following is the substance. Paul, he said, was in this epistle considering the method and object of preaching, and fully demonstrated that the former should be clear and distinct, while the design should be, to edify and build up the Church in the truth. He then commented on the prominence of the figure employed by the Apostle, and on the importance in the day of battle of having a trumpeter, who gives forth clear and distinct sounds, which will be understood by all the army. The same rule applies forcibly to preachers, whose trumpets should give no uncertain sound. In the moment of conflict against sin and error, in which they are the pioneers, a mistake on their part, through giving an uncertain signal, may cause fatal misery. Their language should be so comprehensible to all their hearers, for the danger was too great to waste time in unknown words as is too often done at present.

He then went on to consider the manner of interpretation and proclamation of the truth. Revelation, he said, is a system of truth which the preacher can understand. The Bible is a perfect system of religious truth, just as creation is a perfect system of natural truth. In all departments of natural science, the most perfect order and regularity prevail, and the closer nature is investigated the more will this harmonious law be established, so that in God's work there is no contradiction or confusion can be seen. Applying the illustration to the method and design of preaching, he said God will reveal himself in the spiritual as well as in the natural world, and the preacher must take the Bible as Copernicus and Newton took the book of nature. There are no limits to investigation in this field of inquiry. The most profound study of the Bible, the more beautiful will be found in it, and the greatest scholar is always the most willing to learn. But the preacher must not sound the trumpet till he is sure the sound is certain, and furthermore he must know himself that he is preaching the truth. There are several fundamental doctrines on which uncertain sounds have been given. He then went into a lengthened discussion of the doctrines of sin, regeneration, Divine sovereignty, grace and law, pointing out first the uncertain sounds which have been uttered on these vital points of religious belief, and then giving the clear and certain teachings of Scripture. He concluded by referring to his late appointment as pastor of the church, and said that it would be his great object to interpret aright God's words and works, that he might utter no uncertain sound, so that his hearers and congregation, might meet at last in the Divine presence, and rejoice together for ever.

DIVORCED BY DEATH.

"Will the Marriage Institution Exist in Another World?"—Lecture by Rev. T. T. Kendrick.

"Will the Marriage Institution Exist in Another World" was the subject of a lecture delivered by Rev. T. T. KENDRICK at the Grand-street Methodist Church, Williamsburg, last evening, the text being taken from the twenty-second chapter of Matthew and twenty-eighth verse: "Therefore in the resurrection, whose wife shall she be of the seven? for they all had her." The reverend gentleman remarked that among the Jews a large class professed to believe that in the other world the first marriage was alone recognized, and the question put by those had men was well suited to the mouth of the libertine. There were those, so depraved by vice and evil associations that they looked upon the gratification of their sensual appetites as true happiness, and these men and women with a cloud-like, in her room at No. 945 Avenue B. She was immovable when cut down, but subsequently revived.

JAMES GREENE who on Sunday morning assaulted NICHOLAS JOLLEY, of No. 48 Amity-st Hoboken-street, and robbed him of a silver watch, was yesterday fully committed by Justice BERDELEY at Jefferson Market. The confederate of the man has not yet been secured.

The American Columbarian Society will hold their annual exhibition of fancy pigeons and birds, beginning this day, and continuing for four days, at No. 203 Chatham-street. It is expected that the display this year will be a very fine one.

Rev. S. IRENÆUS PRIME, D. D., is to lecture this evening in the lecture-room of the Young Men's Christian Association. His subject is "Spain and the Alhambra."

BROOKLYN.

Shortly after 2 o'clock yesterday morning fire broke out in the liquor-store of HILDRETH & BROS., No. 120 Park-avenue, and before being extinguished damaged the building and stock to the extent of $2,000, which was covered by insurance in the Atlantic Company. RICHARD SHERWOOD is the owner of the building.

BERNARD MURPHY, of No. 94 Mott-street, New-York, fell overboard from one of the Grand-street ferry-boats, yesterday afternoon, but was saved from drowning by one of the boat hands, who jumped into the water after him, and kept him afloat until other assistance came to hand.

LONG ISLAND.

In 1862 the rate of taxation on $100 in Newtown was seventy-seven cents; in 1864 it was $1 40; in 1866, $1 43; in 1867, $1 78; in 1868, $2 28; in 1869, $4 10 on $100, an increase of 123 per cent in five years. This increased tax was largely owing to the acts of special legislation which were forced upon this town from Albany—Thompson-avenue, a road three miles long, costing the taxpayers $800,000, and the Bilbet-lite road, less than one mile long, costing the enormous sum of $145,000. One of the Commissioners of this last swindle has lately moved from the town, and is now a wealthy resident of New-York, living on the proceeds of his one-year road speculation. Other roads have been carried through, but nothing which has been so gigantic as these two enterprises. The Grand-street extension scheme, which was defeated last session by the rising of the people en masse of the town, would have saddled not less than $150,000 on the town. The Legislature of Assembly recently elected in Queens County are both pledged to oppose all special legislation of whatever kind, including the Blackwell's Island bridge scheme.

On Tuesday evening the Flushing Literary Association, in connection with the Debating Societies of Newtown and Bayside, will discuss the following: "That our next Legislature enact a law providing that a ballot be taken in each city, township and incorporated village of the State, on the question whether intoxicating liquors be sold and manufactured within their respective limits during the year." The debate will be in the Town Hall at Flushing, and it is expected that a large attendance will be called out. Mr. ALBERT WEBB, a prominent lawyer of the city, is President of the Association, and BENJAMIN W. DOWNING, District-Attorney, is Vice-President. Both of these gentlemen will engage in the discussion.

Rev. Mr. BARR, the Presbyterian clergyman at Freeport, who was one of the ministers who waged a religious war against the Mormon settlement in the southern part of Hempstead last Winter, complains that P. K. BRAMHOW, the keeper of the Queens County Poor, refuses to allow him to minister to the paupers on account of the action which he has taken against the Mormons. Mr. BRAMHOW, it will be remembered, is an elder in the Mormon Church, makes his regular pilgrimages to Utah, and was the prime mover in instigating the Mormon exodus from Long Island last Winter.

The Synodical Committee of Long Island have voted to hold mass-meetings in Suffolk County as follows: At Southold Dec. 6, at the Presbyterian Church, at 1½ P. M. At Greenport same day, at 7 P. M. At Sag Harbor, same day, at 7 P. M. At Bridgehampton, Dec. 7 at 1½ in the afternoon; at South Hampton at 7½ in the evening of the same day. The following persons will address the meetings: Rev. John D. Wells, D. D., of Williamsburg; Rev. Henry Van Dyke, of Brooklyn; Rev. R. P. Steel, D. D., of Astoria; Rev. Thomas S. Brown, of Brooklyn; Rev. W. Guthrie Bond, of Sag Harbor; Rev. J. M. Hopkins, of Ravenswood; Hon. Henry E. Hedges, of Bridgehampton; C. S. North, Esq., of Brooklyn. There will be a collection taken up for the purpose of aiding the raising of the five million memorial fund.

The semi-annual meeting of the Suffolk County Medical Society met at Riverhead on Tuesday afternoon. Dr. DAVID B. VAN SCOY, of Amagansett, presided, and Dr. W. W. HEWLITT, of Babylon, was Secretary. Much interest was taken in the meeting, there being a very general attendance. An interesting paper was read by the Secretary, and interesting cases were reported by Dr. HEWLITT, of Islip, and Dr. SKINNER, of Greenport. The next meeting will be the annual meeting, which will be held at Riverhead in May, 1871.

On the 16th inst. the cattle which, for a long time, had been pastured on the Indian reservation at Montauk, and which had caused considerable litigation, were driven off and the Indians left in possession. Two farmers and laborers contended that they had a right to pasture on the Indian lands, but the Courts decided otherwise.

The regular monthly meeting of the Greenpoint Band of Hope No. 1, will be held to-morrow evening, at the Greenpoint Presbyterian Church, Noble-street, Greenpoint. The exercises will consist of declamations, dialogues and singing by the children, and addresses from Rev. STEPHEN MERRITT, D. D., GEO. W. BUNGAY, Esq., and others.

The Long Island Star has collapsed. EVANS, its editor, collected several hundred dollars for subscriptions and advertisements, contracted innumerable debts, and then left for parts unknown. The material has been seized and is offered for sale by the Sheriff. EVANS is charged with many discrepancies, and it will not be safe for him to return to Patchogue.

The Queens County Agricultural Society holds their annual meeting at the Society grounds, on Tuesday morning, at 10 o'clock. There will be an exhibition of field crops, and, in addition, the annual election of officers for the ensuing year.

The assessment for Greenport school tax is completed and amounts to eighty-seven cents on $100. The valuation of property in the district is $31,104.

NEW-JERSEY.

There is a constant army of tramps who make it a business to travel between the great cities, sleeping out of doors when the weather is favorable, and, as soon as the cool nights set in, seeking lodgings in the station-houses. Newark is now beset by these nuisances, on their way to or from New-York and Philadelphia. The number who nightly obtain lodgings at the Station House in Newark is from fifty to seventy-five of such specimens of humanity.

Among the offices to be filled by Governor RANDOLPH, with the approval of the New-Jersey Senate, this Winter, are the Chief-Justiceship, now held by Judge BEASLEY, whose term expires March 8, 1871, the Secretaryship of State, and the Chancery Clerkship.

The Water Commissioners of Jersey City are considering a proposition for the erection of a new reservoir upon a higher elevation than that now in hand, for the benefit of the more elevated portion of the city. The work will cost $165,000.

The Acting Minister to England, Mr. BENJAMIN MORAL, was twenty years ago a poor boy employed in a cotton factory in Trenton, N. J. He first obtained an appointment as an attaché to the corps of Mr. DALLAS in 1857, and has risen by his own efforts without money or influential friends.

Prof. WILLIAM GRIFFIS, of Rutgers College, sailed last week to Japan, to enter upon his duties as Professor of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy in the new University of Japan.
